Mr. HARRISON. I can read it again. Section 13 of the bill providing a civil government in Alaska provides—

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make needful and proper provisions for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, until such time as permanent provisions shall be made for the same.

So I take it to be within his discretion to use any part of it for school-houses. So under this bill I think it is wholly a matter of discretion, but I do not think we can expect or anticipate that the Secretary would use the entire appropriation in building school-houses.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I entirely agree with the Senator in regard to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1086, after "Arkansas City," to strike out "twenty-five thousand" and insert "twenty-six thousand five hundred;" in line 1088, after the words "allowance of," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" in line 1092, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-one thousand five hundred" and insert "thirty-three thousand;" and after the word "dollars," in line 1093, to insert "and the limitation imposed upon the appropriation for this school for the fiscal year 1884 in the act approved March 1, 1883, is hereby repealed;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of the industrial school near Arkansas City, $26,500; and said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance of $175 for the support and education of each scholar; for building for employés at said school, $5,000; pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; in all, $33,000; and the limitation imposed upon the appropriation for this school for the fiscal year 1884 in the act approved March 1, 1883, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1102, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., and for transportation of children to and from said school, $75,000; and said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance not exceeding $175 for the support, education, and transportation of each scholar actually maintained in and supported and educated at said school, but actual cost of transportation and other expenses of such children as are sent out of said school among farmers for support and education may be disbursed from said funds; for annual allowance to Capt. R. H. Pratt, in charge of said Indian industrial school, $1,000; in all, $76,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out, in line 1099, the words "and for transportation of children to and from said school." I propose to add, if that is adopted, after the words "one hundred and seventy-five dollars," in line 1102, the words "exclusive of transportation."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is going to strike out in the wrong place, he will permit me to suggest. He wants to leave those words in, because they apply to the use of the entire $75,000. He wants to put in the words "not including transportation" after "allowance," in line 1101, and to strike out the words "and transportation," in line 1103.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is right. I move to strike out the words "and transportation" in line 1103.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that amendment will now be received, unless it is from the committee, in which case it is in order of course.

Mr. DAWES. It is not from the committee, but it is moved upon conference with the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to insert the word "and" in line 1103, before "education," and say "$175 exclusive of transportation" after "allowance."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire whether that would not better come in after the word "dollars," in line 1102.

Mr. DAWES. It had better be put there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question in that form.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1112, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" after the word "exceeding," in line 1113, to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" in line 1115, to strike out the word "and" before "education" and after "education" to insert "and transportation;" so as to read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Forest Grove, Oreg., $35,000; and said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance of not exceeding $175 for the support, education, and transportation of each scholar.

Mr. DAWES. I make the same motion as in the previous clause.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that will not be necessary there. The school at Forest Grove is located very near to the Indians who are to be educated there. The circumstances are entirely different from those obtaining at Carlisle, which is a number of hundreds of miles away from the nearest Indian who can receive the benefit of the school, and I think the amount is sufficient as it is in the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator from Kansas is very much mistaken in that assertion. I think there are stronger reasons for this amendment in regard to the amount which may be spent per capita for education and transportation at the Forest Grove school than at the Carlisle school. The students at the Forest Grove school are brought from tribes in Alaska seven or eight hundred miles by ocean transportation; they are brought from the Territories of Montana and Idaho and Washington; and the cost of travel and transportation in that country is very much greater in proportion to distance than is the cost in the Eastern States. I think myself that there are stronger reasons why this amendment should be made of this section than existed for making a similar amendment to the preceding section.

Mr. PLUMB. We have provided very liberally for Alaska, whatever Forest Grove may have been doing. No necessity exists for further provision for students there from Alaska. If we are going to carry children from Alaska to Forest Grove, why not take them all down there and leave out the $50,000 we have appropriated to educate them at home. That may be a good thing to do, but at the same time it is not the policy we have adopted. In the next place, in Idaho and Montana there are schools at all the agencies. The school at Forest Grove was established primarily for the purpose of reaching the Indians of Oregon and Washington Territory. They are not very remote, and it was stated to me by a person who was connected with the school, if I am not mistaken, at all events in the presence of that person, that many of these Indians came there on horseback, brought there by their own parents, and without any cost whatever to the Government. It was spoken of as a thing that it was good to do. This allowance here provided is the same, I think, as it has been heretofore. I see by reference to last year's bill that the amount was $200, including transportation.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Kansas is certainly mistaken. I do not think a pupil was ever brought to Forest Grove school on horseback. As I said before, they are taken from tribes in Alaska, from tribes in Washington Territory, from tribes in Idaho, from tribes in Montana, and I think from what I know in regard to the transportation in that country that the average cost of getting them to the school and from the school is greater in that section than in any other part of the country. I shall have something to say directly, before we get through with this section, in regard to Forest Grove school, but prefer to reserve my remarks until I offer an amendment which I intend to offer to another portion of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. The next amendment proposed by the committee should not be adopted. The word "and" should not be stricken out, but the words "and transportation" should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to as suggested by the Senator, if there be no objection. The committee move to strike out the words "and transportation," in line 1115.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "dollars," in line 1116, to strike out "purchase of land and;" in line 1117, after the word "buildings," to insert "to be located on land to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, if a suitable location and quantity of land shall be donated for the purpose;" so as to read:

Erection of buildings, to be located on land to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, if a suitable location and quantity of land shall be donated for the purpose, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. At this point I desire to offer an amendment which ought to be considered before the amendment proposed by the committee to change the total amount of the appropriation for the Forest Grove school from $46,500 to $51,500 is acted on. The first amendment I offer is to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," in line 1120, so as to make the sum $25,000 for the erection of buildings, and then if that is adopted an amendment will necessarily be required in the total amount of the appropriation in the next line, to strike out "fifty-one" and insert "sixty-one," so as to read "$61,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment of the Senator from Oregon, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," in line 1120, if there be no objection to entertaining it.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, if the item to which this amendment relates had received the careful attention of the committee, and as the deliberate judgment of the committee the amount of the proposed appropriation, $15,000, had been inserted in this bill for the purpose mentioned, I should not at this time have ventured to propose the amendment; but I understand that in the multitude of items in this bill the attention of the committee was not called to this particular item, and the Senator who reported the bill, after the report had been made, was under the impression that this item had been increased to $25,000. I feel satisfied that when the facts are thoroughly understood, not only the committee but the Senate will be willing to increase this appropriation as proposed by this amendment; and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a very few moments while I state the reasons why this increased appropriation is asked.

There are in the United States, as has been stated here, exclusive of the Indians in Alaska, about 265,000 Indians. There are in Alaska probably about 35,000 Indians; making a total of 300,000. There are in Alaska, in Washington Territory, in Idaho Territory, in Montana Territory, and in Oregon somewhere from seventy-three to seventy-five thousand Indians, and at least one-third of the entire Indian population is west of the Rocky Mountains. The Forest Grove Indian training-school is the only school of the kind west of the Rocky Mountains. It is situated about twenty-six miles west of Portland on the Oregon Central Railroad and is easy of access from the Indian tribes in Alaska and from all the Indian reservations in the Pacific Northwest. It is situated far enough from the Indian reservations so that the pupils taken from the various tribes are completely separated from the influences and associations of the tribes.

Forest Grove is a quiet country village within which the sale of intoxicating liquors has been forever prohibited by appropriate conditions in the deeds for the town lots given by the original town proprietors, and it is situated in a rich farming country, amid an intelligent and enterprising population. I have no doubt but that the selection of this locality for the school was a wise one, and that the Government may safely make as permanent provisions for that school as for any other like school in the United States.

There were in attendance at the school last year one hundred and fifty-one pupils, taken, as I have already said, from the various tribes in Alaska and scattered throughout the Pacific Northwest, the Territories which I have mentioned and the State of Oregon. I understand that when they were received into school a large number of them were not able to speak the English language well enough to make themselves understood. The school course extends through five years, one-half the time being devoted to industrial education or labor, and one-half being devoted to instruction in the school-room.

So far from these pupils being paid for their labor as was suggested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], they receive no compensation whatever for their labor, and the last year, and probably ever since the school was instituted, the girls have made the clothing for all the pupils in the school. They do all the washing, ironing, and mending, assist in the cooking, and do the housework generally. The boys have made all the shoes worn by the pupils; they made most of the furniture used in the school buildings. They carry on a carpenter-shop, a wagon-shop, blacksmith-shop, and last year they successfully cultivated a farm on shares in the vicinity of the school. I learn from the report of the superintendent of the school that some of the larger boys during the last harvest worked for farmers in the vicinity of the school, giving good satisfaction and receiving full wages; and that out of all the students who have left the school but two have turned out badly, and that two of the boys who learned the carpenter trade at that school are carrying on a carpenter-shop at Tacoma, Wash., furnishing their own material and putting up buildings by contract. They are Northern Indians, too, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

I am inclined to think that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] put too low an estimate on the capacity of these Indians. What I have said in regard to the pupils in this school at Forest Grove I have no doubt is entirely correct. I myself have seen on numerous occasions, on Puget Sound, the Indians from the Puyallup reservation going to and returning from the Puyallup hop-fields where old and young, men and women, are employed every season in picking hops, receiving regular wages, and expending their money for the purposes of self-support.

I have been told of an incident in regard to the Indians of Alaska which shows that in one respect they are not very far behind some of the white people of the Pacific coast. A few years ago some parties from California undertook to establish a cannery there. They took up with them some Chinamen skilled in the art of making cans and putting up salmon. The Indians in Alaska (whether upon a "sand lot" or not, I do not know) got together and resolved that the Chinamen must go, and they went to the proprietors of the cannery and told them that they could catch fish as well as the Chinamen and that the Chinamen must leave. The proprietors of the cannery assured them that it required skilled labor to make the cans and they had brought the Chinamen for that purpose; but before the Indians would permit the Chinamen to engage in this enterprise the proprietors had to assure the Indians that when they had learned to make cans the Chinamen should go.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has stated in his annual report the necessity for new, more substantial, and commodious buildings for this school. I ask the Secretary to read the part which I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Want of money and want of room has compelled the refusal of many urgent applications for admission to the Forest Grove school. It is a great mistake that Congress should have limited to one hundred and fifty the number of pupils to be received in the only training-school west of the Rocky Mountains, especially when the parents readily surrender their children for a five years' course. This school is not yet fairly equipped for work. Its buildings are unsubstantial in construction and inadequate in size, out are as good and commodious as the meager funds allowed therefor would build. It has no land except the lots on which the buildings stand, offered for that purpose by Pacific University. Its small leased farm is not adjacent to the buildings. Funds should be furnished immediately to put up new buildings on a location not far from Forest Grove, where citizens have offered to donate to the Government for that purpose a large tract of good land. I hope Congress at its next session will appropriate not less than $25,000 for this purpose, and will provide for the support of at least two hundred and fifty pupils in this school.

Mr. DOLPH. The superintendent of this school, in his report for 1883, says that Congress ought to make provision at this school for the education of not less than five hundred pupils; that the Indians are anxious to send their children to school; that it is a convenient and suitable place for their instruction; and that the appropriation for buildings ought not to be less than $40,000. The reason, as stated in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, why the present buildings are unsubstantial in construction, are inadequate in size, and are located upon land not owned by the United States is that the original appropriation for buildings was totally inadequate. If my recollection serves me, it was $5,000. Such an inadequate appropriation has proved to be very poor economy. Now, as it appears, not only a new site, but new and more substantial and commodious buildings are imperatively required, and the old buildings are comparatively valueless.

It appears to me that we are about to repeat the blunder which was made five years ago by making an inadequate appropriation upon the mistaken theory that economy consists in making a horizontal reduction in all the estimates which are made by the heads of Departments. There are some estimates which may be reduced without permanent injury to the objects for which they are intended. There are some works in hand that may, if not constructed this year, be completed the next; but this is not one of those appropriations. Before the builder draws a plan of one of these buildings he wants to know how much the Government is going to expend in their erection. You can not construct buildings worth $25,000 for $15,000, and if the necessities of the school require buildings worth $25,000 it seems to me to be the sheerest folly to erect buildings worth only $15,000.

It must be remembered that the buildings for which this appropriation is asked are not alone a school building, but a school-house, a boarding-house, in which the pupils are to be lodged and fed, carpenter-shops, blacksmith-shops, wagon-shops, shoe-shops, and farm buildings upon the land to be donated by the citizens of Forest Grove, suitable for the instruction of the pupils in agricultural and mechanical pursuits. And it is because I believe this proposed appropriation to be entirely inadequate, and because I fear that this undertaking by the Government is to be cramped and dwarfed by making an inadequate provision for the future of the school, that I have moved this amendment.

I do not ask this increased appropriation because this school is located in the State of Oregon or because the money is to be expended there. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that if this school was located in Alaska I should be just as anxious that there should be a sufficient appropriation for the erection of permanent and sufficient buildings for the school.

As has been said, the benevolent people of this country have supplemented by their donations the inadequate appropriations made for the education of the Indians in many cases, and they have gone into Alaska and instituted and are maintaining to-day industrial schools some six in number, where over 1,000 Indian youth of both sexes are being educated by their donations expended through a local religious organization, I believe through an organization of the Presbyterian Church. This very amendment proposes that the people of Forest Grove shall donate the site for these buildings and give land suitable for a farm for the use of the school. I hope that if this Government after it has established this school and demonstrated its utility is too poor to make a sufficient appropriation for adequate buildings, the people of Forest Grove and of Oregon will be called upon to contribute to the expense of the buildings as well as to contribute the land, so that when the buildings are erected they shall be adequate for the purposes intended.

It is not the people of any section who have established this school or are maintaining it; it is the Government of a great people with a full Treasury, and if the recollections of the history of the past dealings of this Government with the Indians is not a sufficient inducement, our own self-interest, the instinct of self-preservation, and the dictates of humanity ought to be a sufficient inducement for us to do everything in our power to prevent the extermination of this unfortunate race and to fit them for the struggle of life in the new and changed circumstances that are being forced upon them by the irresistible advance of civilization.

I speak in regard to this school from personal knowledge. I have visited the school and seen the pupils at work, and examined the products of their labor, and I disagree with the gentlemen who have stated on this floor that we can not educate the Indians and fit them for civilized life. I am firmly convinced that this Government, in entering upon the policy of educating the Indians, and particularly in establishing schools like the Forest Grove school—industrial schools located at such a distance from the tribes that the pupils are removed from the influences and associations of the tribes, where the children of both sexes may receive not only the rudiments of an education but an industrial training, this Government has adopted the only policy by which we may hope to make the Indians self-supporting.

The allotment of land upon Indian reservations to the Indians in severalty, breaking up their tribal relations, will have no doubt a great influence in eradicating the old habits, and in forming in him new habits of life; and it is to be hoped that by making the land allotted to each individual Indian inalienable for a certain length of time, and by the liberal encouragement and assistance of the Government in transforming the land allotted into permanent and comfortable homes, the Indians may be transformed from paupers, supported in idleness by the Government, to self-supporting if not wealth-producing members of the community. And in subjecting them to the laws of the States and Territories within which they reside we may hope to teach them respect for law and order.

But this experiment, in my opinion, largely depends upon the diffusion of knowledge among them, upon the success of this educational experiment. I am firmly convinced that these industrial schools are no longer an experiment—that they are a success. The success which has attended them has been gratifying not only as relates to the pupils themselves but to the tribes also, and I do not believe that any amount of money which has been expended anywhere for education, and I say it with deliberation, has produced better results than has been produced by the money which has been expended in the support of these training-schools. At all events, the Government has fairly entered upon this policy of Indian education; and in making provision for the future of the school at Forest Grove, which is likely to be one of the permanent agencies of the Government in civilizing the Indians, we ought to deal with it in as liberal a manner as the importance of the question demands. I am satisfied that $15,000 is too small a sum to put up adequate buildings. Buildings ought to be erected there, that being the only school west of the Rocky Mountains, sufficient to accommodate five hundred pupils, and we ought to make provision now, while we are building, for the future of this school. The people at Forest Grove propose to donate the necessary lands. The exterior of the buildings ought to be of such a character that they will not be an eyesore to the community, and the interior of the buildings ought to be at least some degree removed from the interior of an Indian wigwam. We only ask buildings of adequate size for the accommodation of the school. I hope the amendment will be adopted, and we shall be given this increase of appropriation.

It is proposed to appropriate $35,000 for education at this point, and that appropriation will be renewed from year to year. These buildings are to be used not alone for the education of these children, but they are the plant of the Government, the means by which the labor of these pupils is to be utilized and by which they are to be made to contribute in part for their future support and education. At the blacksmith shop and wagon shop, last year, at this school considerable work has been done for citizens in the vicinity; and with adequate buildings this school will become, in part at least, self-sustaining, and, unless it is the schools at Hampton and Carlisle, and similar schools, there is not a school in the United States where pupils of the same age do so much toward their own maintenance and education as at Forest Grove.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the committee did not differ with the Senator from Oregon materially as to the value of the Forest Grove school, both in location and in results. It deserves all the encomium which the Senator from Oregon has bestowed upon it, and the hearty support of the Government. It is the only school on the west side of the Rocky Mountains for the education of the Indians. It is about to be removed from its present location, where the buildings are of little value and the land belongs to somebody else, to a spot where it is hoped it will be permanent, a location which the people of Forest Grove propose to furnish. One hundred and sixty acres of land I understand it is proposed to give. The $15,000 that the Senate committee propose here will erect buildings enough to accommodate the school for the present, all the scholars whom we have provided an appropriation to accommodate, and if properly laid out it will leave the situation where it can be added to without loss and with proper regard to ultimately making as large a school as is contemplated by the Senator and as was suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the accommodation of five hundred pupils. But there did not seem to the committee to be any call at this moment for a school large enough to accommodate five hundred scholars. For all that are at present there or who may be accommodated during the next year, during the expenditure of this money, the building will be sufficient if $15,000 be expended properly, and in the large appropriations made by Government for school purposes the committee thought that it was wise to limit this appropriation to $15,000, looking to the future for enlarging it as the necessities of the school and the demands of the Pacific coast might require to the extent that it would be necessary by further appropriations hereafter for school buildings.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon where it is proposed to locate this school with reference to the one now existing there; that is, the building?

Mr. DOLPH. Right in the vicinity of Forest Grove.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not to be moved any distance?

Mr. DOLPH. No great distance.

Mr. PLUMB. What character of buildings does the Government already own?

Mr. DOLPH. The honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs says they are unsubstantial and inadequate.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Oregon what he says about it? He has been there.

Mr. DOLPH. I have been there; and they are such, I undertake to say, with all the objections of the Senator from Kansas to extravagance in this line, that if he should visit this school and examine the building and see the children, as I did, standing up for the want of chairs and eating off tables made by them and off tin platters and drinking out of tin cups and see the inadequate room and want of accommodations, he would come away mortified and chagrined that the United States Government was so parsimonious in this matter.

Mr. DAWES. The buildings as I understood were built by the Indians themselves.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think so, entirely. They were, probably, in part.

Mr. DAWES. Only in part.

Mr. DOLPH. I am surprised at what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Massachusetts. I have had frequent conversations with the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to this appropriation and he is thoroughly of the opinion that $25,000 is required. I called the matter to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs long before the bill was reported, and he certainly told me after it was reported that he thought this appropriation had been increased to $25,000. I therefore supposed I was correct in saying when I addressed the Senate in regard to this appropriation that the attention of the committee had not been particularly directed to this item.

I will say further that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not recommend a building to accommodate five hundred pupils. He recommends only a building for the present to accommodate two hundred and fifty pupils, and I think for a suitable building to be owned by the United States and devoted to school purposes, and for the number of buildings required for such a school and in such a locality as that, $25,000 is small enough, and as small as proper buildings can be erected for even to accommodate two hundred and fifty pupils.

If this were an appropriation to be expended for some transient purpose I would not say a word; I would sit here in silence and let what I consider to be an insufficient appropriation be made; but it is an appropriation the effect of which is to extend through a generation perhaps. I do not agree with the Senator from Kansas when he said in his speech that if he did not see fruits in one year from this, the expenditure of the appropriation made by this bill, he would not vote for another. I fear that with the most enlightened and liberal policy of this Government it will require not a year or a decade, but a generation to elevate the Indian race, to civilize them, and make them self-supporting. I suppose that these buildings will be required at Forest Grove for a generation, and when we lay the foundation-stone of one of these buildings I want it to be of a building of sufficient capacity at least to accommodate the number of children that must be schooled there. As I said before, I want nothing for ornament inside or outside. We want no mahogany desks; we want no fine tables; we want no china crockery; we want no $3.25 shoes. The children will make their own shoes, their own tables, and their own desks. But we want room sufficient to accommodate the pupils who are to be educated there.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not rise to oppose this amendment, but I wanted to have some information. I have got a good deal of it and much of it is important. But it would not hurt my feelings to see Indian children standing up at table. I did it myself when a boy, but whether because I wanted to or could not help myself I do not exactly recall. I did it all the same.

I am glad to know that the Senator from Oregon agrees with me in fearing there will be some generations before we get any return for our money in the way we are spending it. That agrees with my notion. We have been doing this thing for several generations, and we have not any return yet, and I am perfectly prepared to believe it will be two or three generations more before we get any return, and probably we shall be then in the condition of waiting two or three more generations before we get any return.

Now, I want to ask the Senator from Oregon a question about this building and about this land. The estimate for this building was, in the exact language of the Book of Estimates:

Purchase of land and the erection of buildings.

It came in some way to my knowledge that since the time when the estimate was made the people at Forest Grove, or somewhere else—I did not understand how far the school was to be removed from the present location—expected to give the land, and the House thought that if the land was donated $15,000 would be enough, because that part of the purpose of the estimate embraced in the "purchase of land" would have been obviated by this donation. That being presented to the subcommittee having charge of this bill, very little consideration was given to it, but it seemed to be generally understood by whoever presented the matter—and I think it was presented by the Department—that $15,000 would answer the purpose.

But the Senator spoke about a farm. I want to ask him if it is the purpose of these people to donate a farm to the school. I want to ascertain exactly about that. The committee put in a provision in regard to "a suitable location and quantity of land," and I was not certain myself whether that was designed to be a body of land sufficient to answer the purpose of a farm to be used by the school or not. It is very proper of course that the school should not only have it, but the incidental advantage to be derived by the community would be sufficient to warrant them in giving it. Of course they must be the judge of that.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas certainly misunderstood me if he thought I said that it would be a generation or generations before we could get any return from this money. I thought I said as distinctly as any one could make the assertion that I believed the money expended at Forest Grove had produced greater results than the expenditure of the same amount of money anywhere for the same purpose.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not question that. I have a good opinion of this school and as I think full as good perhaps as the Senator has; nor did I understand that his statement in regard to the results to be derived from the expenditure of money related to Forest Grove school, but I thought he meant generally that he feared it would be a generation or so, and I simply wanted to say I shared in his fear most thoroughly.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Kansas is right in supposing that I said I feared the entire Indian race could not be elevated from the state of a savage race to a state of civilization in a year or ten years, and that I feared it would be, with the most enlightened and liberal policy, a generation before they would be made self-supporting members of the community; and I repeat that assertion. But that is no reason why the Government should not proceed with the policy it has adopted in regard to the Indian tribes. I think even that is encouraging after so long a time and the expenditure of so much money in this direction with such unsatisfactory results.

Last fall my attention was called to the necessity for larger buildings, more adequate accommodations, and for a site for the Forest Grove school. As I said before, I visited the school, and I have been carrying on during the past winter a correspondence upon the subject with the superintendent of the school and other benevolent people interested in the education of the Indian and in education generally throughout my State; and there has been a move by the people of Salem and various points in the State to provide the necessary land for the location of this school. My own judgment is that the present location of the school is the best one, and that it should remain there. And I have said to the people of Forest Grove that there will be no money expended with my advice or my consent; that I will not ask the Secretary of the Interior to expend money for erecting buildings unless they furnished not only a site for the buildings but a farm for the school. I understand that recognizing the necessity of doing so they appointed a committee to procure a site for these buildings, and a farm for the use of the school in the neighborhood of the school, and if they have not done it, I am satisfied that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will not locate the school there, and there will be no expenditure for buildings at that place under this appropriation. The citizens of Forest Grove proposing to provide lands sufficient for a site for the buildings, and for a farm for this school, the buildings which are erected there ought to be at least respectable in appearance on the outside and sufficient within for the accommodation of the school.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will permit me, I will, as far as I am concerned, state that I am willing that the amount shall be increased to $20,000, and I think that will be sufficient at all events for the present year. We do not often complete a series of buildings nor do all the building one year that we expect to answer the entire purposes of a school for all time, and that will build a pretty large building.

Mr. DOLPH. There are to be not only shops and a boarding-house and school-rooms, but some farm buildings on the farm.

Mr. PLUMB. There will be something left to be done after the Senator from Oregon and I get through with our work in this world, I am afraid, and I think that amount would be enough, and if he is willing to accept that as far as I am concerned I will agree with him on that amount. If that should be the case we shall then move to add suitable words in line 1119 to indicate that the quantity of land shall be a farm for the use of the school.

Mr. DOLPH. I will agree with the Senator from Kansas that we can not do all in our day, but I propose to do what I can. Half a loaf is better than no bread, however, and as I do not know the temper of the Senate, if the Senate will allow the Senator from Kansas and myself to make an agreement on that subject——

Mr. PLUMB. I will make no agreement, but I shall not oppose it. I hope he will modify his own amendment, that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by making the amount $20,000. I do that in a friendly spirit.

Mr. DOLPH. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Oregon accepts the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon accept the amendment?

Mr. DOLPH. I accept the modification, but with the understanding that probably next year I shall ask for the other $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon modifies his amendment by proposing $20,000. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 1119 I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as the amendment proposed by the committee has been adopted, to amend by inserting after the word "land" the words "sufficient for a farm for the use of the school," and to insert the word "a" between "and" and "quantity;" so as to read:

If a suitable location and a quantity of land sufficient for a farm for the use of the school shall be donated for the purpose.

I offer this so that no question may arise hereafter in regard to what the Government is to get which shall make it necessary to purchase land at any time for the use of the school.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think the amendment is necessary, but I have no objection to it.

Mr. PLUMB. It is exactly in the line of the Senator's own remarks.

Mr. DOLPH. That is according to my idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the language of the clause under consideration. I ask him whether it is understood that this land is to be confined to the vicinity of Forest Grove, or whether other points in the State of Oregon may be competitors for furnishing the land for a farm. I understand the fact to be that there are other points making very liberal offers in the way of lands to secure the location. I do not know anything in respect to the advantages of it, but I should like to have the clause broad enough so that the Secretary of the Interior may make the best arrangement that can be made between the different points, making it a sort of competitive test between rival points.

Mr. DAWES. The land is to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior anywhere in Oregon.

Mr. SLATER. I am a little doubtful whether when you come to examine the whole clause you will not find that he is bound by the first line and restricted to Forest Grove or near Forest Grove.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know but it might be open to that construction.

Mr. DOLPH. If my colleague will permit me I will state that, although I have not seen the deeds, I received a telegram from Hon. Henry Failing, and also a communication from Mr. Hinman and others at Forest Grove, to the effect that the people of Forest Grove have forwarded deeds to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I believe are satisfactory to him, for this land, and that the question may be considered as settled that the buildings will remain at Forest Grove.

Mr. SLATER. That is not the point to which I am directing attention. I understand the people of Salem are endeavoring to compete with Forest Grove by offering very valuable and very eligible lands for the school. I desire that the clause shall be so worded that the Secretary of the Interior may have a choice between the two points. I hardly think that the language as it now stands is broad enough to allow competition. In line 1119, after the word "land" and before the words which have been inserted by unanimous consent, I move to add: "at Forest Grove or elsewhere in the State of Oregon;" so as to read:

If a suitable location and a quantity of land at Forest Grove or elsewhere in the State of Oregon sufficient for a farm for the use of the school shall be donated for the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER].

Mr. DOLPH. While I think the Secretary of the Interior has been himself carrying on a negotiation as to the location, and has already virtually decided upon the location, I do not see that the amendment itself would do any harm, and I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1120, to increase the total appropriation for support of industrial school at Forest Grove, Oreg., from $46,500 to $51,500.

Mr. DAWES. In line 1121 the total should be $56,500. We have added $5,000 to the $15,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "51" and inserting "56," so as to read "$56,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1123, after the word "Nebraska," to strike out "20,000" and insert "26,500;" in line 1125, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" and in line 1128, after the word "all," to strike out "21,500" and insert "28,000;" so as to read:

For support of industrial school for Indians at Genoa, Nebr., $26,500; and said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance of not exceeding $175 for the support and education of each scholar; pay of superintendent, $1,500; in all, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 1129, to add:

And the limitation imposed upon the appropriation for this school for the fiscal year 1884 in the act approved March 1, 1883, is hereby repealed.

Mr. INGALLS. What was that limitation?

Mr. PLUMB. The limitation was on the amount to be expended for each scholar; but under the construction put upon that by the Treasury Department it meant that there must be a scholar supported twelve months at the rate of $200 or $175, whichever it was. In getting the school ready for operation it became necessary to provide certain things for the use and comfort of the scholars, which was to be carried over into another year, but as the school was not carried on for the full period of twelve months the Treasury Department only allowed the aliquot proportion, and it becomes necessary to remove the limitation in order that it may not be obstructive in its character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1135, after the word "Virginia," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-one;" and in line 1138, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of one hundred and twenty Indian children at the school at Hampton, Va., $21,000; transportation of children to and from said school, $2,500; in all, $23,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1140, after the words "education of," to strike out "two hundred and eighty-four" and insert "Indian;" and in line 1141, after the word "at," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of Indian children, at $175 per annum each, at the Indian school at Lawrence, Kans., $56,800; pay of superintendent of school, $2,000; teams, wagons, and farm implements for manual labor school, $2,000; in all, $60,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "exceed," in line 1156, to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" in line 1158, after the word "child," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "eighty;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and of this amount not exceeding $5,000 may be used for the establishment and support of a boarding-school for the Pottawatomie Indians;" and in line 1162, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For care, support, and education of Indian children at industrial, agricultural, mechanical, or other schools, other than those herein provided for, in any of the States or Territories of the United States, at a rate not to exceed $175 for each child, $80,000; and of said sum not exceeding $10,000 may be used for the transportation of Indian children to and from said schools, and also for the placing of children from all the Indian schools, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such children moral, industrial, and educational training for a term of not less than three years, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor.

Mr. DAWES. We have stricken out the charge of transportation to the $175 at the different schools, and it is proposed to provide for that transportation in line 1158 by adding $10,000 to the $80,000; and in line 1162 by making the $10,000 $20,000. I move, therefore, in line 1158, to increase the appropriation from $80,000 to $90,000; and in line 1162 to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

And of said sum not exceeding $20,000 may be used for the transportation of Indian children to and from said schools.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In line 1163, before the word "schools," the word "said" should be stricken out and the word "Indian" put in its place; so as to read:

To and from Indian schools, and also for the placing of children from all the Indian schools.

In the present phraseology it is confined to these particular schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that the paragraph would be improved by inserting, after the word "the," in line 1164, the words "transportation and," to relieve it of some ambiguity and I think more fully to carry out the idea which the Senator from Massachusetts had in mind in raising the appropriation. Therefore, after the word "the," in line 1164, I move to insert the words "transportation and;" so as to read:

And also for the transportation and placing of children from all the Indian schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In order to make the sentence grammatical it should read:

And also for the transportation of children from all the Indian schools and placing them, with the consent of their parents.

I move to so amend the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] proposes to strike out the words "and placing," in line 1164, and in line 1165, after the word "schools," to insert "and placing them;" so as to read:

And also for the transportation of children from all the Indian schools and placing them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the clause from line 1172 to line 1176, inclusive, in the following words:

For the erection of a boarding-house, the purchase of tools and agricultural implements and other necessary articles to establish an industrial training-school among the Eastern Band of Cherokees in North Carolina, $4,000.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. I do not see any reason why the remnant of the Eastern Band of Cherokees in North Carolina should not have the same facilities that are afforded to other Indians. They are settled upon a wild, mountainous tract of land, widely scattered and have not the means of obtaining industrial education from contact with the whites. It is absolutely necessary if they are to be furnished with educational facilities of that nature that they should have a school-house and a boarding-school where they can be educated. The amount is very small, and I am assured by charitable and philanthropic gentlemen who are engaged in that work that the appropriation is absolutely necessary, and that those Indians are making very satisfactory progress in education.

Mr. RANSOM. I know that the Committee on Appropriations will agree with me that if there had been a full consideration of this amendment it would not have been adopted even by the committee. I have spoken to several members of the committee since the bill was reported, and a thorough examination of the subject has satisfied me and I think has satisfied the committee that this amendment ought not to be made, but that the appropriation is a proper one.

The idea prevailed with the committee that the education of all the Indians in that State was provided for already, but such is not the fact. If the Indians really need an appropriation of that character I am certain that within the limits of exact truth I may say that nowhere in the Union could an appropriation be made which in all probability would do more good than at this particular point.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senators are right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts how the Committee on Appropriations made such an infamous blunder as to recommend striking out this paragraph? It comes in here and there is not a member of the committee who will get up and defend the action of the committee. I should like to know how it is that the Committee on Appropriations arrived at the conclusion to strike it out.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Missouri having been an active member of the committee and present when it was done, does not need to be told.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not the mouthpiece of the committee in this matter, and I have not given my assent to what has been said and done here—not a particle; but the Senator from Massachusetts has. Now, I should like to know why it was that the committee struck out the paragraph when they come right in here and take it all back.

Mr. DAWES. It was stricken out because the information which the committee had at the time was, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] has stated, of such a character that they thought the Indians were having the benefit of education from the schools of North Carolina; but since then the committee have had such information as led me to make the remark I did just now, that I thought the Senators from North Carolina were correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1176, to insert—

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to expend so much of the sum of $150,000 appropriated for the purpose of further instructing and civilizing Indian children dwelling west of the Mississippi River, &c., in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved May 17, 1882 (Statutes 22, page 86), as he may deem necessary for the purpose of erecting and repairing such school buildings as are now in course of construction or for which contracts have been made, and for such other educational purposes as he may consider proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1192, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to purchase for Indian industrial-school purposes the buildings and other improvements in what is known as Keam's Cañon, within the reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, established for the use and occupancy of the Moquis and other Indians, by executive order dated December 16, 1882, and to pay therefor such sum as he shall deem just and reasonable, not exceeding $25,000: Provided, That upon payment therefor the owner of said buildings and other improvements shall execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a full relinquishment of all his right, title, and interest in and to the same, and to any and all buildings and other improvements of whatsoever character owned by him within the limits of said reservation, and in and to any land therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1208, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers to superintend and direct farming among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "reservations," in line 1252, to insert "and for the gathering, care, and removal of Leggins's band of Pi-Utes to a suitable place on some existing reservation, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior;" in line 1255, after the word "Interior," to strike out "seven" and insert "seventeen;" and in line 1257, after the word "all," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "twenty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in Nevada: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, and support and civilization of Indians located on the Pi-Ute, Walker River, Western Shoshone, and Pyramid Lake reservations, and for the gathering, care, and removal of Leggins's band of Pi-Utes to a suitable place on some existing reservation, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, $17,000; and pay of employés at same agencies, $6,000; in all, $23,000.

Mr. DAWES. In line 1253 I move to amend the amendment proposed by the committee by inserting before the word "Leggins's" the words "the Winnemucca or;" so as to read:

And for the gathering, care, and removal of the Winnemucca or Leggins's band of Pi-Utes.

These are the different names the band is known by.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1274, after the words "Uintah Valley," to insert "and Ouray agencies;" and in line 1275, after the word "said," to strike out "agency" and insert "agencies;" so as to make the clause read:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in Utah: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, support and civilization of Indians at Uintah Valley and Ouray agencies, and pay of employés at said agencies, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1289, after the word "at," to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" in line 1291, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" in line 1295, after the word "agencies," to strike out "72,000" and insert "93,600;" and in line 1297, before the word "policeman," to insert "Indian;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of Indian police: For the service of not exceeding eight hundred privates, at $7 per month each, and not exceeding one hundred officers, at $10 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, and for the purchase of equipments and rations for policemen of non-ration agencies, $93,600: Provided, That the agent of the Navajo Indians may employ ten Indian policemen, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $15 per month each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1304, after the word "supplies," to strike out "under contract;" in line 1305, to strike out "warehouse" and insert "warehouses;" in line 1306, after the word "employés," to strike out "in New York;" and at the end of the clause to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in all contracts for the purchase and delivery of beef cattle it shall be provided that the delivery shall be made as often as once each month, and for so many only as shall be necessary for the succeeding month.

So as to make the clause read:

Telegraphing and making purchases of Indian supplies: To pay the expenses of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian service, including rent of warehouses and pay of necessary employés; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates; inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphy, $40,000: Provided, That in all contracts for the purchase and delivery of beef cattle it shall be provided that the delivery shall be made as often as once each month, and for so many only as shall be necessary for the next succeeding month.

Mr. BECK. I ought to know, but I do not know, why the proviso was inserted limiting it to each month. There are months in the year in the extreme northern regions where deliveries can not be made at all.

Mr. DAWES. The only question I think I and the Senator would have would be whether it should be as often as once a month; but I will state the condition of things. All of the bidders for supplying the Indians with live beef combined and refused to make bids unless they were allowed to insert a provision that they should be permitted to deliver in the fall all their beef for seven months. The consequence has been that with such a provision in their contracts they would deliver in November six or seven months of live beef at once over to the Government in those northern regions and compel the Government to take all the risk, all the expense, all the shrinkage, and all the loss upon itself. The select committee who went out among the Indians found that at one particular agency there were delivered last year in quantity under contract seven months' supply, and there was no place to keep them and about 50 per cent. of them were lost, so that when we were there there was a communication from the Indian Bureau to the agent to estimate the cost of making a yard inclosed with barbed-wire fence of six miles square in which to place the live cattle that were to be under contract delivered en bloc for six months, in which they were to wander about during the six months until they were slain, seeking their way out and growing less and less, with all the cost of keeping them. There was a protest from very many of the agencies against the insertion of this provision in the contract, and the reply came from the Indian Bureau that they were in the power of the contractors; that the contractors had refused to bid unless they had that provision in, and they were obliged to take it. The Committee on Appropriations thought that an act of Congress might possibly be of more power than the combination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1318, after the word "agents," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Transportation of Indian supplies: For this amount, for necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, including pay and expenses of transportation agents, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1326.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 1321, after the word "reservations," I move to insert the words "and defining by surveys the boundaries of reservations;" so as to read:

For this amount, for survey and subdivision of Indian reservations, and defining by surveys the boundaries of reservations, and of lands to be allotted to Indians, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out the clause from line 1339 to line 1349, inclusive, in the following words:

Any act which when done by a citizen of the United States would be a crime shall be and is hereby declared equally a crime when done by any Indian upon or belonging to any Indian reservation; and such Indian committing such crime shall be subject to the same jurisdiction and amenable to the same process that any citizen would be in like case; and no Department nor officer of the United States of America shall have or exercise power or authority to shield or protect such Indian criminal from just punishment, nor shall any money herein or hereby appropriated be used for that purpose or to that end.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1350, after "irrigating-ditches," to strike out "at" and insert "on;" in line 1351, after the word "Indian," to strike out "agencies" and insert "reservations, and instructing Indians in farming in connection therewith;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of constructing irrigating ditches on Indian reservations, and instructing Indians in farming in connection therewith, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1361, to insert:

Removal and support of confederated bands of Utes: For this amount, to reimburse the Ute removal fund for sum expended out of said fund for the survey of public lands of the United States, formerly the Ute Indian reservation, in Colorado, $21,575.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1367, to insert:

For this amount, to reimburse the Ute removal fund for sum expended out of said fund in payment for improvements of white settlers on lands in Utah selected for the location of the Uncompahgre Utes, $10,338.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1372, to insert:

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to continue to carry out the provisions of the act of June 15, 1880, "ratifying the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," $5,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be taken from moneys appropriated by said act and remaining unexpended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1382, to insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to appoint and pay the expenses of a commission of three persons to determine upon examination what changes should be made in the boundary lines of Indian reservations and the location of Indian agencies in Montana Territory, and what changes are necessary in the location of the Rosebud, Lower Brulé, and Cheyenne River agencies, in Dakota Territory, $10,000.

Mr. DAWES. I want the leave of the committee to enlarge the scope of that commission a little, so that while they are there they can take into consideration the propriety of reducing the Crow reservation, which seems to be necessary; and for that purpose I move to insert the word "Northern" before "Montana" in line 1388; to strike out "Territory" and then insert "and to confer with the Crows in reference to a reduction of their reservation," after the word "Territory," which is to be stricken out, and to insert the words "and also to determine" before the word "what" in line 1388; so as to read:

And the location of Indian agencies in Northern Montana, and to confer with the Crows in reference to a reduction of their reservation, and also to determine what changes are necessary in the location of the Rosebud, Lower Brulé, and Cheyenne River agencies, in Dakota Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 1391, just after the amendment of the committee last acted on:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to appoint and pay the expenses of a commission of three persons to examine and report upon the character, extent, thickness, and depth of each vein, the value of the coal per ton on the dump, and the best method to utilize the same within the limits of the White Mountain Indian reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and the result of said investigation to be reported to Congress, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. DAWES. "And to determine the best method of disposing thereof," or words to that effect, should be inserted.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that for the benefit of the Indians, or somebody else?

Mr. DAWES. The commissioners are to report their opinion; it can not have any other effect.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether that is for the purpose of improving the property of the Indians.

Mr. DAWES. This was before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was reported from that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is believed there is a very valuable coal-mine on this White Mountain reservation which several parties are after, and made claims to some extent, with some appearance of validity, to the mine itself. There is a difference of opinion in the Interior Department as to the best method of disposing of it for the benefit of the Indians, and also for the benefit of the inhabitants there. The coal is of great value there as fuel, and it is very desirable that it should be brought into the market, and should be brought into the market in the best way. The Secretary had one plan, the Commissioner had another plan, and the Committee on Indian Affairs had another plan, and another branch of this Congress had another plan. It was concluded on the whole that the best method was to select three men who had some knowledge of coal to go down and visit this reservation and see what was the best method for bringing it into the market and securing for the Indians a fair royalty for it.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the chairman of the committee express the opinion that there is joint-ownership between the Indians and the white people there of that vein?

Mr. DAWES. No; the committee were of the opinion that the white people could not in law assert any claim to this coal; but the explorers had discovered this coal and brought it to light, and it was thought by the Interior Department and also by the committee that in the disposition of it, if preference was to be given anybody in leasing it for instance, they should have preference over strangers, but should have no rights except that they should be recognized as having some equitable claim above strangers.

Mr. MORGAN. Then, if I understand it, we are asked to appropriate $5,000 for the purpose of developing coal property that some white persons say they found upon an Indian reservation, the title of which is not in any white person but in the Indians, but the benefits of which, I understand, are to inure to these discoverers.

Mr. DAWES. The title is not in the Indians because this is a reservation by executive order, but the Indians are upon a poor reservation of large extent, good for nothing except for berries and such things. The water upon it is very scarce; it lies in the vicinity of this coal-mine, very valuable water, and it must be secured to the Indians. There was danger if you brought the coal-mines into the market that you carried with them all the water. At the same time it is deemed but just and right that although the Indian has no legal title to this reservation this coal-mine should inure to his support, and therefore some method is to be devised that will result in two things: giving the Indians a fair royalty in the nature of support, and securing to the people of Arizona a protection against a monopoly that would grasp the whole of it and make it just about as bad for the people as if it were not in existence. That is the purpose. It will take about $5,000 to do that.

There is no doubt but that this $5,000 will be charged over to the royalty, and the expense of bringing the coal into the market will come out of the receipts from the production of it, so that the Treasury will not suffer. If it was paid out of the Treasury and the Treasury succeeded in relieving itself of $5,000 toward the expense of taking care of these Indians, it would be just as long as it would be short.

The Indian Committee have had a great deal of trouble to devise a way. My friend and colleague upon the committee who offers this amendment, who has had great experience in coal matters, has had the subject troubling him for weeks, and he has had various claimants all around him, following him. I do not wish to criticise their claims or say that one is better than another, but the outcome of the whole should be that the Indian should have for his support a fair royalty and the people of Arizona (which is of immense importance) should have an opportunity to get cheap fuel.

Mr. MORGAN. Before we appropriate any money for developing this coal-mine through the active exertions of the United States Government, I should like to have it settled whether this is an Indian reservation, to begin with. The Senator from Massachusetts says it is a reservation by executive order. Well, that is under the law of the United States. The President of the United States has a right to set aside reservations in certain cases, and they are just as valid, I suppose, if valid at all, as if they were set aside by an act of Congress, and they give the Indians the same right of occupancy of the country. The terms and conditions are prescribed by the statute on which they became the holders of those reservations, and so there is very little uncertainty about that. We can therefore deal with reservations by executive order with as much certainty in respect to the right of occupancy and the right of use and possession as if they were defined by a statute.

Now, this is either a reservation or it is not. If it is a reservation, the white people have not any business there working upon it, asserting mineral claims upon it, coal-land claims, or anything of that kind, and the committee ought to bring in here, it seems to me, very definite information whether this new enterprise of developing a coal-mine is to inure to the advantage of the Indian tribe alone or whether it is to inure to the advantage of some speculators in that Territory. We are informed that flocks of speculators follow some gentleman of the committee about the city here and annoy him and vex him.

Mr. DAWES. I did not mean to speak disparagingly of men who have a claim. I only brought that before the Senate to show the desire of the committee to get the best disposition of the thing.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think it is any disparagement to a man to try to get a good piece of property in a fair way, and there can not be a fairer way than through a committee of the Senate, for the Senate is not going to encourage any man in any illegitimate speculation. But to come down to the real merits of the question, it seems to me obvious that there ought to be no joint-stock arrangements here between the intruders upon that Territory and the Indians, and that the Government ought not to take a sort of dormant partnership in which Indians are to some extent partners, and speculators are to another extent partners, but this matter ought to be made very clear, and we ought to decide in this bill of appropriations when we undertake to do this work whether we are doing it for the Indian or whether we are doing it for the white people. I am not in favor of expending any money there to assist gentlemen, no matter how much coal is needed, in the private enterprise of developing it for their own advantage, or the advantage of their own railroad company, or their manufactories, or whatever it may be.

If the Committee on Indian Affairs think there is some advantage to be gained out of this barren and sterile Territory by enabling the Indians to work it and showing them how to do it, they assisting in furnishing the labor, I am willing they should do it; and in fact I like the enterprise, because that is one way to put an Indian to work; but I wish to admonish the Senator from Massachusetts that by the next session of Congress it is very likely that he will have to repeat, against his own committee and against his own work, those denunciations which he yesterday made against the people of the United States at large for encroachments upon Indian property. We ought to conserve it, take care of it for them, and I really do not like the shape in which this matter comes before the Senate.

I believe it is the first time that the Congress of the United States has undertaken to mine a mine of coal, or silver, or gold, or any other enterprise of this character for the benefit of an Indian tribe. I think the subject is new so far as that feature of it is concerned, and I should like very much if the committee could find some way to guard it by saying that the whole benefit or advantage of this arrangement shall inure exclusively to the Indian tribe. I have not examined the language of it critically. My attention was arrested by the peculiarity of the case as drawn into debate here.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the amendment which I was instructed to offer by the Committee on Indian Affairs, having been reported by that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations under the rules, simply provides that a commission shall be appointed to ascertain the extent and value of the coal in this Indian reservation in Arizona. The matter came before the Committee on Indian Affairs, it being shown that there were discoveries of coal and that parties had sought to make contracts with the Indians for mining this coal on a royalty; and the recommendation of the Interior Department was that the land should be leased on a royalty of 10 or 12 cents a ton. The subject was referred to me for examination, and I have made as thorough an examination as was possible; and I am satisfied from all the information I can get that this deposit of coal is very extensive and valuable. There is no positive information in the Interior Department as to its extent or value, but from the best information I can get the miners and smelters in that country are now paying $60 a ton for the coke brought there.

If you ascertain both the extent and value of this coal, it can be leased or worked for the benefit of these Indians, and instead of paying a royalty of ten or twelve cents a ton, as recommended by the Department, in all probability it will be thirty cents a ton, and yield a revenue more than sufficient to maintain the entire tribe. Therefore the object of the amendment is not looking to claims of any white squatters, or those who found that the coal was there, to ascertain what is the best disposition to be made of this coal, which is believed to be so valuable, for the benefit of the Indians. It takes no account of the claims presented there, and the very object is to carry out the idea of my friend from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the amendment be reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as modified, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to appoint and pay the expenses of a commission of three persons to examine and report upon the character, extent, thickness, and depth of each vein, the value of the coal per ton on the dump, and the best method to utilize the same, and to determine the best methods of disposing thereof within the limits of the White Mountain Indian reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and the result of said investigation to be reported to Congress, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment by saying "report their opinion as to the best methods," striking out "determine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the amendment. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "determine" and insert "report their opinion as to."

Mr. ALLISON. My object is, as the Senate will see, to not involve these commissioners in making a decision. As I understand this question, there is no right in any person to go on this reservation or to acquire any right in these coal-fields. This reservation has been set apart by an executive order, and therefore is as much a reservation as though it was established by law. The tribes on this reservation, known as the San Carlos reservation, are expensive to the Government of the United States, and we have in this very bill an appropriation of $280,000 for the purpose of maintaining them. We have appropriated annually for the last fifteen years from three to four hundred thousand dollars for the maintenance of these Indians. Now, if there is any method by which the coal on the reservation can be utilized for their support, or if there is a method whereby they can themselves be induced in some way to mine the coal with the aid of the Government, it certainly will be of great advantage, and whatever that advantage is it should inure either to the Indians or to the United States.

There are men, as I understand, who claim to have settled upon one hundred and sixty acres of this reservation and to have pre-emption rights there. They have no such rights. Others have claimed that they have taken a lease, and so on. Of course no lease is valid made with an Indian tribe. Therefore there are no rights here that the Government of the United States, in my judgment, is bound to protect. But we are without precise information, and I think it is very wise that a commission of proper persons be sent there to give the Government full information in reference to this situation, and then the Congress of the United States can deal with the question, not in the interest of speculators or adventurers, but in the interest of the Government of the United States and these Indian tribes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the paragraph beginning at line 1383. That paragraph seems to commit to the commission to be appointed the authority to determine absolutely, without any supervision by anybody, what changes are necessary to be made, &c. Now I suggest that in line 1386 the words "determine upon" be stricken out, and the word "examination" be changed to "examine" and the word "report" be inserted there.

Mr. DAWES. That is right.

Mr. PLUMB. So as to read "examine and report." I move to make it read:

A commission of three persons to examine and report what changes should be made in the boundary lines of Indian reservations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves in line 1386 to strike out the words "determine upon examination" and insert in lieu thereof "examine and report." Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. The word "determine" is used in the amendment which I caused to be inserted.

Mr. PLUMB. That I did not observe.

Mr. DAWES. I agree it would be better to change that also and use the word "report" instead of "determine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to amend the amendment agreed to on his motion which now reads "and also to determine what changes are necessary."

Mr. DAWES. So as to make it read:

And also to report, upon examination, what changes are necessary in the location of the Rosebud, Lower Brulé, and Cheyenne River agencies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and this amendment will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1391, to insert:

To enable the Seminole Indians now in Florida to obtain homesteads upon the public lands, and to establish themselves thereon, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1394, to insert:

To pay the following claimants, named in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior of February 20, 1884, being House Executive Document No. 102, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, for damages suffered from the raid of the Northern Cheyenne Indians in September, 1878, to be paid from the unexpended balances of treaty funds belonging to the Northern Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, which are hereby reappropriated for the purpose, namely: To Mrs. M. Smith, $295; Mrs. E. J. Humphrey, $623; John R. Vancleve, $240; Peter D. Adams, $60; Robert Bridel, $585.85; James Bailey, $110; N. W. Rider, $61.50; J. J. Keefer, $70; Henry Rathbon, $45; E. D. Stillson, $40; Patrick Drohen, $491.50; Mary Hamper, $55; John McKenzie, $128.50; Lizzie Steffen, $80; J. B. Jennings, $88; Thomas L. Collins, $700; Wenzel Rahan, $80; Franz Tacha, $100; Joseph Cilek, $150; George M. Miller, $40; estate of J. Erwin, $305; in all, $4,348.35.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I suppose the amendment is liable to a point of order?

Mr. PLUMB. It is to carry out a treaty stipulation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes it to be in order as reported from a standing committee.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Here is the rule:

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The "existing law" or "treaty stipulation," so far as I am able to discover, is not "cited on the face of the amendment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Wisconsin is right.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a treaty between these Indians and the United States which requires us to do this thing; and not only that but almost all, in fact all but these have already been paid by an appropriation made last year in the same way on the same bill, and these claims have since been sent down from the Interior Department. This is simply carrying out the plan adopted by Congress at a previous session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin insist upon his point of order?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think I shall not insist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1422, to insert:

To pay the following-named claimants, or their legal representatives, in full satisfaction of their claims for damages caused by the Ute Indians at the time of the Ute massacre at the White River agency in 1879, to be paid from the funds belonging to the confederated bands of Ute Indians, namely: To Josephine Meeker, $460; Mrs. A. D. Meeker, $778.85: Sophronia E. Price, $701.50; Sarah M. Post, $500; W. E. Eskridge, $220; George T. Dresser, $881; George L. Shepard, $108; Thomas T. Thompson, $203; Albert A. Woodbury, $79.50; F. L. Mansfield, $187.25; McLane and Dillman, $300; in all $4,419.10.

Mr. FARLEY. There was an amendment referred to the Committee on Appropriations to allow the claim of J. M. Hogan, of California, for depredations committed by the Shoshone Indians, and the Secretary of the Interior in making an estimate of the amount of claims estimated this claim at $6,600. There has been no appropriation for it, and under the Revised Statutes, I understand, none of these claims can be paid until there is an appropriation for that purpose. The committee failed to make the amendment. I have submitted it in writing to the committee, and I propose at this stage of the bill to insert on page 59, line 1440, after the word "dollars:"

The sum of $6,600 to pay the claim of J. M. Hogan, of Stockton, Cal., for depredations committed by the Shoshone Indians, which claim has been examined and allowed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The tribe by which the depredations were committed were the Shoshone tribe. The papers were submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and this claim is mentioned with a number of other claims similarly situated, but none of them, I presume, have applied for relief on the present appropriation bill. I now offer the amendment and ask the Committee on Appropriations the reason why it was not reported. The Secretary of the Interior says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 5, 1883.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in compliance with the first clause of section 445, Revised Statutes, the accompanying abstract showing nature, character, and amount of all claims presented to the Secretary of the Interior since date of last report, December 6, 1882, for compensation for depredations committed by Indians, with his action thereon, and the evidence upon which this action is based.

The claims are numbered 1 to 62 inclusive.

Very respectfully,

M. L. JOSLYN, Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

I have not the other papers that have been filed in the case, but this is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior. When the claim was first filed the claimant asked $8,000. It has undergone a thorough investigation, and the Department finds that there is $6,600 due to him; but it requires an appropriation before that money can be paid, and I am of the opinion that this appropriation bill is the proper place to offer the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator tell me what is the number of the document from which he reads?

Mr. FARLEY. House of Representatives, Executive Document No. 23, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California proposes an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will first be read.

Mr. FARLEY. The amendment was offered in writing, and I have noted in pencil the place where it is to come in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send to the Chair what he considers to be the estimate of the Department?

Mr. FARLEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1440, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert—

Six thousand six hundred dollars for paying the claim of J. M. Hogan, of Stockton, Cal., for depredations committed by the Shoshone Indians, which claim has been examined and allowed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FARLEY. "Allowed" in the manner which the paper shows.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order that it is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair finds that the section of the statutes referred to, 445, requires the Secretary of the Interior to make annual reports to Congress as follows:

First. A report showing the nature, character, and amount of all claims presented to him during the preceding year under laws or treaty stipulations for compensation for depredations committed by Indians, whether allowed by him or not, and the evidence upon which his action was based.

Another provision of the statutes requires that all estimates of general appropriations shall be submitted through the Secretary of the Treasury by the heads of the various Departments. The letter of the Secretary of the Interior does not, the Chair thinks, appear to be an estimate, but is in pursuance of that statute which requires him to report to Congress stating the facts. The letter under date of December 5, 1883, addressed by the Secretary of the Interior to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is, that in compliance with this section which the Chair has read he transmits—

The accompanying abstract showing nature, character, and amount of all claims presented to the Secretary of the Interior since date of last report, December 6, 1882, for compensation for depredations committed by Indians, with his action thereon and the evidence upon which his action is based.

The Chair does not think that this comes within the statute and the rule in regard to estimates of appropriations, and when applied to private claims the Chair thinks the section, 445, is not a provision of existing law which requires an appropriation for any such purpose. The Chair, therefore, is obliged to sustain the point of order. The amendment is not to carry out the provisions of an existing law. The law only requires the Secretary to report for the information of Congress the facts in his possession.

Mr. FARLEY. The report is made to one branch of Congress and the papers are before Congress. It is a mere technical proposition to say that the report has not been before Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not refer to this paper in that connection. The Chair states that in his opinion this paper is not an estimate from the head of a Department; but as a private claim the rule does not allow it to be put as an amendment on an appropriation bill, even if estimated for, unless it is to carry out the provisions of an existing law, which has always been held to be a law which showed that the United States owed a sum of money which ought to be paid, and this law which is referred to does not provide for the payment of anything.

Mr. FARLEY. The law is that none of these claims shall be paid unless there is an appropriation for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Precisely; but that does not make it a provision of existing law which it is necessary to pass an appropriation to carry out. It is a provision for furnishing information to Congress. It is perfectly competent for the Senator from California to introduce an independent bill, which the Senate has a perfect right to pass; but the rule of the Senate declares that no amendment for a private claim, as this clearly is, shall be received to a general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty obligation. The law does not declare that the United States owes any obligation in this case, as the Chair understands it. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to insert from line 1423 to line 1441.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1441, to insert:

That such Indians as may now be located on public lands, or as may, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, so locate during the year for which this appropriation is made, may avail themselves of the provisions of the homestead laws as fully and to the same extent as may now be done by citizens of the United States; and to aid such Indians in making selections of homesteads and the necessary proofs at the proper land offices, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated; but no fees or commissions shall be charged on account of said entries or proofs. All patents therefor shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus entered for the period of twenty-five years in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian by whom such entry shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever.

Mr. DAWES. In line 1444, after the word "Interior" I move to insert "or otherwise," so as to read "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior or otherwise."

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to my colleague whether the words "widow and" should not be inserted in line 1457, so that in case of lawful marriage the right of dower of the widow should be preserved.

Mr. DAWES. I think that should be so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. DAWES. My colleague proposes to insert, before the word "heirs," in line 1457, the words "widow and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts in line 1444.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] now proposes to further amend the amendment, in line 1457, after the word "heirs," by inserting "widow and;" so as to read:

Of his widow and heirs, according to the laws of the State or Territory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Then in line 1460 a like amendment should be made, inserting "widow and" before "heirs."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that I fear we can not properly get through with the bill to-day.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think there is anything now but to read the bill straight through. There are only three pages. If the Senator thinks we can not get through them, I shall not insist, but I should prefer to make the effort.

Several SENATORS. Go ahead.

Mr. DAWES. The committee have nothing to add.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there is to be no further controversy, only a mere reading through of the bill, I shall not insist on an adjournment; but if there is to be a controversy on anything, I think the bill had better go over.

Sections 2 and 3 of the bill were read.

Mr. DAWES. At the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. HOAR], the word "contingency," in line 7 of section 3, should be "exigency." I move to strike out "contingency" and insert "exigency."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 4 of the bill was read. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to add to section 4 the following proviso:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the President, may use any sums appropriated in this act for subsistence, and not absolutely necessary for that purpose, for the purchase of stock cattle for the benefit of the tribe for which such appropriation is made, and shall report to Congress, at its next session thereafter, an account of such purchases.

Mr. DAWES. After the word "made" I move to insert the words "or for the assistance of such Indians in making them farmers."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Sections 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 of the bill were read.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 10. That no part of the expenses of the public-lands service shall be deducted from the proceeds of Indian lands sold through the General Land Office, except as authorized by the treaty or agreement providing for the disposition of the lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 11. That at any of the Indian reservations where there is now on hand Government property not required for the use and benefit of the Indians at said reservations the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to move such property to other Indian reservations where it may be required, or to sell it and apply the proceeds of the same in the purchase of such articles as may be needed for the use of the Indians for whom said property was purchased; and he shall make report of his action hereunder to the next session of Congress thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I want to change two words in section 4, in the amendment there adopted. I move to strike out, in line 24 of that section, the words "such purchases" and insert the words "his action under this provision;" so as to read that the Secretary of the Interior—

Shall report to Congress, at its next session thereafter, an account of his action under this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to make the amendment indicated in an amendment already adopted in section 4. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 1, line 306, an amendment was made to the amendment of the committee on my suggestion, and I am not entirely satisfied with it. I propose to change it so that it will read:

And shall be disposed of to actual settlers under the homestead laws only, except, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to amend an amendment agreed to in section 1, line 306. It will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 306, after the word "be," it is proposed to strike out "subject to settlement and entry" and in lieu thereof to insert "disposed of;" so as to read:

And shall be disposed of to actual settlers under the homestead laws only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. On page 38, after line 914, I move to insert:

Three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to cause to be surveyed such portion of the Puyallup reservation, in Washington Territory, into lots as he may deem advisable, and direct the same assigned to such individual Indians or families on such reservation as are willing to avail themselves of the privileges and will locate on the same as permanent homes in accordance with the terms of article 6 of the treaty made on December 26, 1854, and ratified by the Senate March 3, 1855.

The provision of the treaty is as follows:

And he may further, at his discretion, cause the whole or any portion of the lands hereby reserved, or of such other land as may be selected in lieu thereof, to be surveyed into lots and assign the same to such individuals or families as are willing to avail themselves of the privilege and will locate on the same as a permanent home, on the same terms and subject to the same regulations as are provided in the sixth article of the treaty with the Omahas, so far as the same may be applicable.

It is designed to carry out the provision of that treaty, and it has become necessary, as represented by the Department and by the Delegate from the Territory of Washington, that this action should be taken now, prior to any attempt made to get possession of the land of these Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. On the forty-third page, in line 1043, there is a typographical error. The name of the Indians there should be "Quil-leh-utes," instead of "Quil-len-utes."

Mr. COCKRELL. They will never know it. [Laughter.]

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the letter "n" in "Quil-len-utes" and insert the letter "h."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend, on page 4, lines 76 and 77, by striking out the words "eighteen hundred dollars" and inserting "$2,000;" so as to read:

At the Mescalero agency, at $2,000.

Mr. DAWES. I am very sorry to be obliged to raise a point of order there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves an amendment, on line 76, to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to make this change at this time.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs strongly recommends that the pay of this agent be increased. He is a most efficient officer, Major Llewellyn, known, I think, to the Committee on Indian Affairs certainly, and he has received the very highest commendation from General Crook and General Mackenzie, commanding in Arizona. He is certainly a very efficient officer. There has lately been added to this officer the care of another band of Indians, numbering, I think, very nearly 1,000, which increases the duties and responsibilities of this agency. I hope the agent will be placed on a par with those who are receiving at this time a compensation of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. DAWES. The House cut down this agent's salary from $1,800 to $1,500. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate proposed to restore it, and the Senate has restored it to $1,800. The motion of the Senator is to increase it above $1,800. I have no doubt that he is a worthy agent, and the duties of the agency are very onerous, but still if we commence raising the salaries of these agents I do not know where we shall stop.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he does not know the fact that the duties of this agent have been very largely increased within the last year?

Mr. DAWES. What the Senator says in respect to this agent I know to be true, and I know that it is difficult for the Department to keep this particular agent there; but we have sixty-eight Indian agents. That is the answer which I make.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask if this has not been a particularly difficult band of Indians to control?

Mr. DAWES. That is so.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Department had nobody that could control them——

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This will take only a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This band was very difficult to control. The community there were at the mercy of these Indians. They were committing murder and robbery. Major Llewellyn, by reason of the reputation he had earned in another branch of service, had arrested the attention of the Indian Department and he was solicited to take this place, unsought by himself or unasked by his friends. He was solicited because of his known character for bravery, judgment, and discretion to take charge of this band of Indians, and he did it, and he has served the Department so well and the interests of that section of the country so well that the Department themselves asked that his salary should be raised to $2,000 a year. Attention was called to the fact that Mr. Llewellyn was about to leave the service, could not stay there on the terms allowed, and the Department themselves asked him to remain. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs sent a communication in regard to Mr. Llewellyn, in which he stated:

If his salary is not increased he will not remain, and it will be very difficult to fill his place. Inadequate compensation drives off the Indian agents that are good for anything, and leaves the service to be conducted by men who are broken down physically or politically or financially.

That is the statement of the Commissioner himself; and in that connection it is proper to state that not very long ago I received, in the interest of that section of New Mexico where many bands of the Apaches reside, a letter from the former chief-justice of the Territory, earnestly asking that whatever could be done to retain Major Llewellyn in the control of these Indians should be done; and he spoke of the benefit of his services to that entire section of country.

As my colleague has said, the commanding generals of that department for the last two or three years have been profuse in their expressions of admiration for the gallantry and bravery of the man who has the control and management of these Indians; and much is due to a person like Major Llewellyn, who has earned this character and this reputation. He has shown ability in the service, and he is not only faithful and brave, but intelligent and discriminating, so much so as to call from the officials in that Territory, civil and military, requests for his retention. And when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Washington asks both branches of Congress to secure his retention, and he says in his letter how difficult it is to fill the place, it is due to the service and due to the people of that section, when the salary is placed at less than that of several agents in the service, that it should be increased. It is but little to ask in the interest of good order, in the interest of the people of New Mexico and Arizona, that what can be done to retain such a man in the service should be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. That requires an amendment of the sum total appropriated for pay of agents. In line 118 there should be added $200 to the total amount of $90,300.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusettss moves to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to read $90,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DAWES. A verbal amendment is needed which the Secretary has called my attention to. In line 3 of the amendment on page 8, at the end of line 159, the words "not to exceed $2,000" should be inserted after the word "commission," instead of after "balances;" so as to read:

And any unexpended balances of appropriations for the expenses of said commission, not to exceed $2,000, are hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for Alaska.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4359) in relation to the Legislature of Dakota Territory; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 316) granting a pension to Katharina T. Wunsh;

A bill (S. 1369) to prevent and punish counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, or other securities of foreign governments; and

A bill (H. R. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Wright.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' PENSIONS.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave at this time to introduce a bill. I desire to state that this is a bill in regard to pensions, and contains provisions of bills heretofore introduced by other Senators, and also some suggestions of the Grand Army of the Republic. I ask that it be printed, so that the committee may have it before them.

The bill (S. 2208) to provide pensions for certain invalid soldiers and sailors who have been discharged from the Army or Navy of the United States after three months' service therein during the war of the rebellion, and for the widows and dependent parents of deceased pensioners, and to increase the rate of pension in certain cases, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 112, being Senate bill 1283, known as the Utah bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1283) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish merely to give notice that I will to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the morning business, as a matter of accommodation to Senators who desire to leave the city, ask to take up Order of Business No. 529, being the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics. I think we can dispose of it during the morning hour.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I shall insist on proceeding with the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall join in that.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 13, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

Mr. BEACH. I move by unanimous consent that the Clerk omit the reading of the purely formal part of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings relating to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings, with the above exception, was then read and approved.

D. O. RILEY.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7008) for the relief of D. O. Riley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN KNOCKMAN.

Mr. ROBERTSON, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7009) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John Knockman, late private Company K, Fifty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LABOR COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to submit for present consideration a resolution which I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, May 21, 1884, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Labor, to wit: H. R. 2550, in reference to imported labor; H. R. 6541, eight-hour law, and H. R. 995, convict labor.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

IMPROVEMENT OF BAR AT SANDY HOOK.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, by unanimous consent, presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, for the improvement of the bar at Sandy Hook; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, held May 1, 1884, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the memorial to Congress of the merchants, ship-owners, and others interested in the commercial prosperity of the port of New York, praying for the improvement of Sandy Hook bar, has been formally approved by the Legislatures of New York and New Jersey respectively,

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York hereby approves the said memorial, and that the standing committee on the harbor and shipping be authorized and empowered to adopt such measures as they may deem suitable and proper to promote the immediate passage by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of a law making provision for deepening and improving the approaches to this port.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution, authenticated by the seal of the chamber and by the signatures of its officers, be transmitted to the President of the United States and to both Houses of Congress.

JAS. M. BROWN, President.

A true copy.

GEORGE WILSON, Secretary.

INDIAN WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 172) amendatory of the act of June 27, 1882, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and report to Congress the amount of all claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, for money expended and indebtedness assumed by said States and Territories in repelling invasion and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution and the accompanying amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs will be read subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the act of Congress approved June 27, 1882, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and report to Congress the amount of all claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, for money expended and indebtedness assumed by said States and Territories in repelling invasion and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "April, in the year 1861," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "January, in the year 1851."

The SPEAKER. The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs will now be read.

The Clerk rend as follows:

Add at the end of section 1 of the said act the following:

"Provided, That such claims in the State of California arising on and after the 1st day of January, 1851, shall be examined and investigated as aforesaid."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the joint resolution and amendment and for their present consideration?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the right to object will be reserved until the gentleman from California will explain what particular claims are to be considered under this joint resolution as arising between the years 1851 and 1861.

The SPEAKER. The right to object will be reserved and by unanimous consent the gentleman from California will be allowed to submit his statement.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Speaker, the object of this amendment is to correct an inadvertence occurring in the passage of the bill which this joint resolution proposes to amend. That inadvertence consists in this: In providing as it does for the settlement of Indian claims in the several States and Territories, including California. The member who inserted the name of the State of California was unaware of the fact that no Indian war claims whatever on the part of the State of California existed subsequent to the time of the commencement of the period proper and satisfactory in reference to the other States and Territories. But, on the contrary, claims reported in this House beginning in 1851 were embraced in the bill that had been put on the Calendar. That member, not adverting to that fact, failed to call the attention of the House when acting on the bill—that is, to the date California Indian claims commenced. Now the object of this is to have the Indian claims of California settled with those coming from other States and Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask the gentleman from California whether these claims coming from California occurring between 1851 and 1861 were not adjusted at one time by a commission and provision made by law for their payment?

Mr. ROSECRANS. A commission formerly settled those claims and paid a part of them; the remainder only failed to be paid because there was not money enough.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then what else is there to do but to pay the balance of the money due to the State of California?

Mr. CASSIDY. There is no provision in this joint resolution to pay anything. It is merely making provision for the adjustment of these claims of the State of California.

Mr. HOLMAN. But if there has been an adjustment already, if there were some of these accounts which were settled and paid, why not provide for the settlement of what remains rather than provide for another commission?

Mr. CASSIDY. It did not go far enough back to include the claims in California. This joint resolution includes those claims which were before not included.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, if I understand the gentleman from California, these accounts have been already adjusted and partly paid, and the only question now is with reference to a claim for the remainder?

Mr. ROSECRANS. Between thirty and forty thousand dollars remain unpaid.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me ask the gentleman if these claims have been already adjusted by the commission whether the effect of this resolution would not be to reopen all of the claims which have been rejected by the commission?

Mr. ROSECRANS. By no means; it has no effect upon them. It enables the State of California simply to get at its proportion of this indebtedness without further legislation. Unless this addition is made to the present resolution there would necessarily be another bill introduced for the same purpose. There was a bill reported by the last Congress which related to this very subject, but it was not complete in this respect. Now I want to get this resolution amended in some way so that the State of California may have the opportunity to get that which is acknowledged to be due. There is no question as to the right of the claim, but it must be adjusted and this insertion of the State of California in the bill of 1882 was of no effect so far as the State's interest was concerned without inserting the date from which the claim should be considered.

Mr. BLOUNT. But let me ask the gentleman why it is if the claims have been adjusted by a commission it is necessary that the Treasury Department should go over the whole ground again?

Mr. ROSECRANS. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia I must say that I do not presume the Secretary of the Treasury will do any unnecessary work in that direction.

Mr. BLOUNT. But you require it by the bill.

Mr. ROSECRANS. No; the object is only to get a decision upon the point as a finality.

Mr. CASSIDY. In order to enable a full settlement of what are acknowledged as valid claims to be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I understand that you are not content with that. The proposition is to have the Treasury Department re-examine all of the claims. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. ROSECRANS. The gentleman from Georgia misunderstands the case if he understands that to be the condition of it.

The fact is this: The State of California issued certain bonds to pay the expenses of the Indian war; and in 1853 provision was made for the payment of these bonds, with interest then due.

But the Secretary of War acting at that time thought it necessary that the expenditures for which the State of California issued the bonds should be examined, and that the vouchers should be considered by the Treasury Department in Washington before payment was authorized.

The result of that was a delay in the adjustment of the accounts for a period of two or three years. During all of that time the interest was accruing on the bonds, and finally when a decision was reached in the case, and the money ordered to be paid, the sum which had been appropriated for the purpose was not sufficient to cover the bonds and the overdue coupons. Moreover, at that time there were about $30,000 of these bonds which had not then been presented. So that these bonds which had not been adjudicated or presented and the overdue coupons and accrued interest was the portion of the indebtedness which could not be liquidated with the sum placed at the disposal of the Government. The Government therefore applied the sum to the redemption of such bonds as it could cancel, and left some bonds uncanceled to the amount that I have stated and also the overdue coupons. It is therefore these coupons and the accrued interest claimed by these parties upon the overdue coupons and the unpresented bonds for which the adjustment is sought to be made by the Treasury Department. The object of this resolution is to enable the State of California to come in under the operation of the provisions of this joint resolution and have her claim reached. There is no benefit to California by the passage of this resolution in its present form and without the modification suggested, for it does not reach our case at all. It was not known by the person who inserted the name of California in the bill that the claims began in 1851 and not in 1861, being the period covered by this joint resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from California allow another question?

Mr. ROSECRANS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has this matter to which he now refers been submitted to the commission—the question with reference to these overdue coupons and outstanding claims?

Mr. ROSECRANS. With reference to the overdue coupons?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I have already stated the condition. In order to make it more clear, I will repeat that when the vouchers were brought to Washington and examined, as required by the Secretary of War, and provision made for the payment of the money, the time that elapsed was such that there was not money enough to pay the principal and accrued interest. Had the whole amount been paid at that time it would probably have been sufficient, but since that time this interest has accrued. But there were $30,000 worth of bonds which had not been brought before the commission, so that there are these $30,000 of bonds and the overdue coupons to be paid. The men who owned the overdue coupons took the money so far as it went and kept the coupons which were detached by the commissioners appointed for the redemption of them, because there was not money enough to pay them. Now, the men who held the $30,000 of unpaid bonds and the overdue coupons are the claimants in these Indian claims. Of course they lay claim to interest on the overdue and unpaid coupons. That is the unadjusted part of the claim.

Mr. CASSIDY. Let me ask the gentleman from California if this does not simply involve the question of the adjustment of a claim for some thirty to forty thousand dollars in California for which provision was supposed to have been made in a preceding bill?

Mr. ROSECRANS. Yes, sir; that is all.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it may go considerably further.

Mr. CASSIDY. And the subject will come again before Congress after the report upon the character of these claims is made when the money is to be appropriated?

Mr. ROSECRANS. Of course.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see how that is to be.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS] if this joint resolution has been reported favorably by any committee of the House?

Mr. ROSECRANS. Certainly. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, and has been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

AMENDMENT OF THURMAN ACT.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a privileged report. In pursuance of leave heretofore granted I present the views of the minority of the Committee on Pacific Railroads on the bill (H. R. 6771) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to state that I shall call up the business of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads on the very earliest day possible. We have been assigned a day for the consideration of reports from that committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. By a special order of the House this day immediately after the reading of the Journal has been assigned for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Territories. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. EVINS] is recognized.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. By instructions of the Committee on Territories, I desire to take up as the first bill for consideration the bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for Alaska. Inasmuch as there has been some difference of opinion as to whether that bill is excluded by the terms of the order I ask unanimous consent to take it up. I do not think myself it is embraced within the terms of the order of the House, but to avoid any controversy on the point I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Yes, sir; I ask that it may be considered in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from South Carolina had better agree to that.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I consent to that; and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported by the Committee on Territories. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for Alaska.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first and formal reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. The establishment of some form of government for the Territory of Alaska is demanded by every consideration of national honor and good faith. By the stipulations of the treaty the people of that Territory who transferred their citizenship to the Government of the United States are entitled to the protection of their property and their lives, and these guarantees are made by the stipulations of the treaty. For seventeen years, Mr. Chairman, we have neglected to provide any sort of government for the people of this Territory, in violation of the treaty obligations and in violation of good faith to those people who have trusted us; and we now ask this Congress to give them something like a civil government. We do not ask any expensive government. This bill does not provide anything of the kind. It simply provides for the appointment of a governor, of a United States district court judge with circuit court powers, of a district attorney, of a marshal, of a clerk, and of four commissioners. In other words, with the exception of the office of governor, it simply creates a judicial district of the Territory of Alaska. To-day there is no semblance of law in that vast Territory. Whatever property and rights those people may have are at the mercy of any adventurer or of the mob.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him what laws operate there?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Under the provisions of this bill the general laws of the State of Oregon are made operative in this Territory, so far as they are not inconsistent with this bill or with the laws of the United States; and all laws of the United States applicable to Territories are made applicable to this Territory.

Mr. BLOUNT. How about changes of the law, should they become necessary?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. The bill does not provide for that. This Congress can change them if deemed advisable. According to the best information obtainable in regard to the population of this Territory there are within its limits over 35,000 Indians of the various tribes. They have been variously estimated from thirty-five to fifty or sixty thousand. Of these Indians the Aleuts are the most intelligent. Some of them are highly educated. It is said that the first triangulations made on the coast of Alaska of the harbors there, and which form the basis of the coast survey of that Territory to-day, were made by educated Aleuts. These Aleuts are described as being very thrifty, industrious people, readily adapting themselves to the civilized habits of the white man. In fact a large number of various tribes, some seven or eight thousand, are members of the Greek or Russian Church, and the older people among them have been educated through the means of that Church.

But since this Territory has passed into the hands of the United States little or no attention has been given to the matter of the education of these people, except what has been done through the missionary efforts of some of the churches. The Presbyterian Board of Missions has a very flourishing school at Fort Wrangel, and there is another school at Sitka; but these are the only schools that are now provided for these people. It is said by those who know them that they are as fully qualified for citizenship, and will adapt themselves as readily to the habits of the American people and to their laws as did the Mexicans who were received into citizenship in California, New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona. Therefore it may be said that a large body of these people are now prepared for citizenship.

There being no law to protect the white man in his property or life, the white population at present is very small, though according to the best estimates the committee can get it is increasing. There are probably from seven hundred to eight hundred white people who may be said to be permanent residents of the Territory; and at certain seasons of the year the number of whites run up to twelve or fifteen hundred, when miners go there to engage in mining.

However, we should not measure our duty to these people by the number or the fewness of them. Wherever there is an American citizen he is entitled to all the advantages, immunities, and rights of every other citizen, and the Government should feel bound to guarantee those rights to him in some shape or form.

As to the climate and resources of this vast region of country, about which I suppose a great many here have not taken the pains to inform themselves, I would say that it is not such an ice-bound desert as it was described to be when first purchased by Mr. Seward. It is a country the resources of which are as yet but little known. What we do know of them leads us to the conclusion that there are in that Territory vast resources which may be developed to the great advantage not only of the people there but of the whole country.

The great chain of mountains running from Central America through Mexico, the United States, and British Columbia into Alaska is rich throughout its whole length in the precious metals. I have myself seen some specimens of the precious metals brought from Alaska, and there is reason to believe that they will yet be found there in large and paying quantities. In fact, a number of companies have already been organized to prosecute a vigorous search for them, but they are unwilling to make any great venture without some power to guard and protect their rights; but even without law large shipments of bullion have been made. I saw an account of one the other day amounting to some thousands of ounces of gold, I believe.

Rev. Dr. Jackson and some others who have spent much time in the Territory say that there is a vast quantity of iron ore there; that in what is called the Chilkaht country there is an iron mountain similar to the one near Saint Louis and equally rich and valuable. They also say that on the Copper River there are inexhaustible stores of copper.

To the surprise of many who have not examined the question, the climate on the southwestern coast is exceedingly mild. It is tempered by the Japan stream which flows along the coast stored with tropical heat, so as to make the winter climate of Southwestern Alaska about the mean temperature of the State of Georgia and the summer climate about the mean temperature of the State of Minnesota, according to accurate accounts kept by the agents of the Russian Government for more than forty years.

The difficulty about that portion of the country, however, is its great humidity. The warm Japan stream coming in contact with the cold atmosphere and the cold waters of the northern regions creates a vast deal of humidity, and there is a great deal of rain and fog along the coast. The soil is said to be rich and of good depth, and it will grow some of the root crops and barley and other cereals, but the climate is too moist to ripen the grain fully. As an agricultural country there is not a very encouraging outlook.

The chief resources of the country will be found in its mining operations and in its timber, especially in its forests of yellow cedar, which is said to be the finest timber in the world. I understand that it is selling at present in Portland, Oreg., for about $60 a thousand feet, and the time will come, when the timber supply of this country in Maine, Wisconsin, Michigan, and other timber-producing States is exhausted, when the timber of Alaska will be of vast importance.

Mr. KASSON. And then the fisheries.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Yes, the fisheries, as my friend suggests. The stories in regard to them are most wonderful, and would really tax the credulity of most men who should hear what is said by those who have been there and seen for themselves. The finest salmon, halibut, codfish, and fish of all kinds are to be found there. There are already a number of canneries established upon this southwestern coast, but there is not a sufficient market on the Pacific coast as yet, and the demand is not equal to the supply. Some of these days these fisheries are bound to provide largely for the wants of a large portion of the civilized world.

A MEMBER. And the seal-fisheries.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. The most valuable part of the resources of the Territory at present is something that was not taken into account when we purchased Alaska. I refer to the great seal-fisheries, which are established some two hundred miles or more north of the Alaskan peninsula, on the Saint George and Saint Paul Islands, small islands—about six miles by twelve in extent, I believe. The seal company pays the United States Government $55,000 a year as rent for these islands. Then they pay $2.62½ as a royalty upon every seal they are allowed to take, and they are allowed to take annually 100,000. This pays the Government annually the sum of $317,000, which is more than 4 per cent. upon the purchase-money paid by the United States for this vast Territory, the amount having been, I believe, $7,200,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How many white people are there in the whole Territory of Alaska?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I stated a few moments ago, in answer to a question, the aggregate population according to the best information the committee could get, which was very meager. The country is so vast in its dimensions, the settlements are so far apart—Sitka, the capital of the Territory, being for instance 1,200 miles from Oonalaska—you can hardly conceive of the extent of the Territory without taking a map and looking at it. But scattered over this Territory, so far as we can ascertain, are about seven hundred or eight hundred permanent white residents.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How many Indians?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. About 35,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Are not some of those Indians semi-civilized?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Oh, yes, as I stated a while ago.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was not present.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. There are 7,000 or 8,000 of those Indians, known as Christians, who have adopted the dress and to a very great extent the habits of the white people. They dress as our people do, in clothing carried there by the merchants of this country.

In addition to the seal-fisheries the fur company realize more than $1,000,000 a year from the land furs. Besides there is a very large business done in the seal otter.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Are there any great rivers in that country?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. The largest river on this continent is in Alaska—the Yukon River, which is navigable for 1,500 or 2,000 miles from its mouth, where it has a breadth of seventy miles.

The country is wonderful in its rugged mountains, in its smoking volcanoes, in its impenetrable depths of forest, as well as in resources, which are as yet unexplored. Few men have ventured into the vast interior of the country. We may form some idea of its vast extent when we remember that it is equal in area to one-sixth of the whole of the United States, including the Territories. The interior of the country along the Yukon River and from that up to the Arctic Sea is said to be an ice morass. Nearer the coast it is inhabited by the Esquimaux—a savage, nomadic tribe. A great many of the Indians of the interior are engaged in furnishing skins and furs to the stations along the Yukon River which have been established by the fur company.

Mr. Chairman, I have in a very hurried and desultory manner gone over the features and resources of the Territory of Alaska. As I stated in the beginning, I am not in a physical condition to make a speech, but I shall be glad to answer any question which any gentleman may desire to propound.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Perhaps the gentleman has stated, though I did not hear the statement, what is the total population of the Territory?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. About 35,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What kind of government has the Territory had?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I am glad my friend has asked me that question. It has had no government whatever that can properly bear that name. Immediately after the Territory was ceded to the United States there was, I believe, a quasi-military government established. A few squads of regulars stationed at different points through the Territory administered justice by a "drumhead court-martial," so far as any justice was administered at all. At present the only semblance of government there is exercised through the collector of customs and the commander of the United States vessel. In 1881 two men were arrested by the captain of this vessel. No doubt it was a very proper thing for him to do; I only mention the circumstance to show the utter want of everything like law in that country. These men were arrested for some misconduct by the captain and were imprisoned. He reported the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury and wanted to know what he should do with these men. He was the only peace officer in that country. The Secretary said that he had done right in arresting them, and that he should keep them in prison just as long as he thought it necessary to punish them properly.

Now, it would be a disgrace to any despotic government, and to this great Republic of America it is a shame and an outrage, that these people have been left so long in this condition.

Mr. CASSIDY. If the gentleman will yield to me I would like to say a few words on this subject.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. CASSIDY. Three or four minutes.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CASSIDY. I think it is especially important this bill should be enacted into law. I know from my personal knowledge the settlement and development of that vast Territory have been greatly retarded because there has been no form of law or of protection for life or property within its boundaries. I have had during the last two sessions of Congress as many perhaps as fifty-eight letters from gentlemen on the Pacific coast, mining men in particular, who desire to go to Alaska Territory, but they have been reluctant to go there and attempt to develop its mineral resources and open up that vast region because there was no protection for their investment or for their property.

During last summer I was in San Francisco, and I saw it stated in the papers that a native of that country who had committed a cold-blooded murder was brought to San Francisco, and when the time arrived to give him a hearing there were no witnesses and he was allowed to go at large—turned loose for want of prosecution.

There is no form of law, there is no protection of property or life there. This fact alone has retarded the settlement of that Territory. I think it is of the highest importance this bill should be speedily enacted into law.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I will now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD].

Mr. BUDD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add my evidence to that of the gentleman from Nevada as to the lack of proper laws in Alaska. This absence of proper laws in a portion of the United States which is larger in area than Colorado, California, and Texas combined, and which contains 33,000 inhabitants, a territory rich in mineral and other wealth, is of itself a conclusive reason why this bill should become a law. It has been asked, "What laws are enforced there now and how?" The laws have been the changeable wills of United States officers, and enforced in such manner as to them appeared proper. In their hands, strange as it may seem, have been the powers of taking life, liberty, and property without the restraint or forms of law. At least they have done so, and I have yet to learn that any one has been either censured or removed for his actions.

To illustrate: In the fall of 1882 the San Francisco journals contained an account of an interview with certain persons who came from Alaska on a United States vessel. The accounts as given in these journals were undoubtedly correct; they have been since sustained by official report. They show proceedings unworthy a drumhead court-martial; that the laws were made and executed on United States revenue-cutters. It appears that two sailors or employés of some company at Sitka had by accident or otherwise killed or badly injured an Indian; that the Indians took these two men and detained them under a demand that the company should pay in blankets to the relatives of the dead Indian the damages. This has been the custom in the Territory for many years. A United States vessel was then at Sitka, and, with the collector on board, proceeded to the Indian village. The officer in charge released the two men without any trouble, and then demanded from the Indians, as a fine or for damages, four hundred blankets, under a threat to destroy their village and property were the blankets not delivered at the time specified. The Indians did not comply with this peremptory order of this royal dictator. I understand they did not have the blankets. The commander of this United States vessel was a law unto himself, and in the morning he, a United States officer, judge, jury, and sheriff, fulfilled his threat and shelled the Indian village. Forty canoes and many blankets were destroyed. The village and winter stores were burned and destroyed by Uncle Sam's seamen under orders of their commander, while the guns of Uncle Sam were throwing shot into the homes of these defenseless Indians.

This was in October, 1882, in the fall of an Alaskan winter. For doing that which in any civilized country would subject one to a nominal fine only these poor Indians lost all, because there was no law in Alaska. All their blankets, all their provisions, all their homes were cut down; and whether any Indians were killed reports do not say, for the vessels steamed away as soon as the outrage had been committed.

There are few other countries in the civilized world where such acts of an officer would not be followed by dismissal.

Several MEMBERS. What was his name?

Mr. BUDD. I do not now recall the name of this person. It was a United States vessel, commanded by a United States officer. It was fully published at the time and has not been denied, and there is an official record of the facts, which I will secure and have read to this House before debate closes on this bill.

Mr. LONG. When was it?

Mr. BUDD. About a year and a half ago; October, 1882. It was a matter stated in the journals at the time and subsequently reported to Congress, and, as I have said, I have never heard any denial of the facts on the part of the people who were on board the vessel. But this, Mr. Chairman, is only in line with the conduct and policy of the Government of the United States toward the Indian tribes, not only in Alaska but elsewhere throughout this country. They have been treated in a like manner North, South, East, and West. You have only to turn to the Chivington massacre and the Piegan affair of 1870. In the Chivington massacre the Indians were cut down by troops under the United States flag, also in Piegan affair.

Mr. KASSON. He was not a United States officer, but was in command of volunteers.

Mr. BUDD. Yes, Colonel Chivington, of Colorado, was in command of volunteers, and his force was composed of volunteers; yet it was while under the promised protection of the United States flag that the Indians were massacred and cut down by him—women and children scalped and men tortured and mutilated in a horrible manner.

Mr. KASSON. It was under the authority of the rifles of those volunteers.

Mr. BUDD. It was under the authority of the rifles of those volunteers, to be sure; but it was also under the flag of the United States.

I have stated these facts for the purpose of showing the absolute necessity for the passage and enforcement of some law to protect life and property in the Territory of Alaska. As to Indian matters my views are few. Individual responsibility and land in severalty are the true foundation-stones of a just and effective Indian policy. Give them the protection of the law; require from them its strict observance; place before them some end to attain, and teach them that they must work or want. I know this will take time, but unless we begin soon we will never accomplish anything.

When an Indian commits murder hang him; when he commits any other crime punish him. Punish the white who injures the Indian and the Indian who injures the white.

Indian wars originate because of retaliations for wrongs that the Government does not provide adequate relief for. We punish the many for the acts of the few, and sustain these pauper criminals in idleness. But enough of Indians.

The resources of Alaska are undisputed. They have never been fully ascertained. The absence of law and lack of protection to person and property have deterred persons from entering that Territory.

Alaska contains nearly 580,000 square miles, and has a coast line of 4,000 miles. Through it run many fine rivers, one, the Yukon, being larger than the Ganges or the Oronoco.

Copper, iron, petroleum, silver, and some gold, as well as other metals, are found.

As a fur-producing country Alaska is very valuable. In 1880 there were shipped sea-otter skins valued at fully half a million dollars, and seal-skins valued at a million dollars. Besides these there are annnually killed, approximately, marten, 10,000; mink, 20,000; fox, 8,000; beaver, 4,000; bear, 1,000. The fishing product of one year has been 1,483,083 gallons oil, 526,566 pounds whalebone, valued at $1,661,922.

The timber supply appears almost inexhaustible. The most valuable of its trees is the yellow cedar. What the resources may prove it is impossible to say until the country is settled, or at least explored.

The people there and those who wish to go there ask for some law to protect them. They ask for a government not fully Territorial but such as is suited to their condition—a skeleton form, with the laws of Oregon, wherever they can be applied, to fill it out. We of the Pacific coast have a special interest in this bill, and have therefore so persistently favored it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

UNITED STATES REVENUE MARINE,
UNITED STATES REVENUE-STEAMER CORWIN,
San Francisco, Cal., November 20, 1882.

SIR: * * * We left Juneau City on the 20th, and touching again at Killisnoo, arrived at Sitka on the 21st.

During the afternoon of the 23d the superintendent of the fishing station at Killisnoo reached Sitka with his family, with the following report, and requesting protection from the United States steamer Adams. On the 22d of October, while the company's whaling boat was fishing in Hootsnoo Lagoon, one of the bombs used in whaling accidentally exploded, killing one of the native crew, who happened to hold the rank of medicineman or shaman among the tribe. For this man the natives demanded two hundred blankets, at the same time seizing the whaling boats with their equipments, and holding two of the white men prisoners until the amount should be paid. In case the demand was not met by the company the natives threatened to burn the company's store and buildings, destroy the boats, and put to death the white prisoners.

Acting upon this information, Capt. E. C. Merriman, of the Adams, placed on board the company's steamer Favorite some marines, and, as the Adams was thought too large for the work, the Corwin was tendered, and Captain Merriman, together with the collector of customs, proceeded upon the Corwin to the scene of the disturbance.

Remaining at Lindenberg Harbor that night, we reached Killisnoo early on the morning of the 25th. The following morning we proceeded to Hootsnoo Lagoon, and came to anchor off the Indian village located there.

Immediately we anchored the white men were released, some of the ringleading Indians captured, and the release of the property effected. In addition to this, as a punishment and as a guarantee for future good behavior, Captain Merriman demanded twice the number of blankets demanded by the Indians, and threatened, in case of refusal, to destroy their canoes and villages. Refusing to pay the amount and remaining defiant, their canoes, to the number of forty, were taken and destroyed, after having selected those which belonged to the Indians who had remained friendly to the white men. Remaining unsubdued, their summer camp at this place was burned. Weighing anchor we steamed out of the lagoon, and at 2 o'clock hove to off the village of Hootsnoo and proceeded to shell the town. After shelling the village the marines were landed under cover of the guns, and they, setting fire to the houses, destroyed the entire village, with the exception of the friendly Indians.

After the boats returned we steamed down to Killisnoo, and remaining there during the night, reached Sitka the following afternoon, with twenty-two seamen of the Adams, whom we had received on board for transportation. * * *

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. A. HEALY,
First Lieutenant, U. S. R. M., Commanding.

Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, SITKA, ALASKA, Collector's Office, November 9, 1882.

Hon. CHAS. J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: On the 28th of last month I had the honor to transmit to the Department the following telegram:

SITKA, October 28, 1882.

SECRETARY TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.:

26th inst. Hoochenoo Indians becoming troublesome, capturing property from whites, Commander Merriman repaired thither in Corwin. Became necessary to shell and destroy village, canoes, and make prisoners. Severe lesson taught. Particulars by mail.

It is presumed that all essential information has already been rendered the Department by the report of the commander of the Corwin himself, and that as the expedition was a joint one upon behalf of the Navy and Treasury Departments, the report of the naval commander will also reach the head of his Department, hence it will be unnecessary for me to enter into general details, but merely give a synopsis of what I saw myself as an eyewitness, and my opinion of the necessity which existed for adopting such stringent measures.

On the night of October 22, while this company were whaling in the Kootsnoo Lagoon, a bomb, shot from the whale-boat at a whale, accidentally exploded and killed an Indian shaman, who composed one of the crew: whereupon the latter immediately arose and, aided by about one hundred Indians, overpowered the two white men in the boat and took them prisoners, captured the boat, nets, whaling gear, and steam-launch of the company, valued at several thousand dollars, and demanded payment of two hundred blankets for the dead man. The white men were kept close prisoners. A plan was formed to murder the engineer of the launch, who fortunately did not take the trail expected.

Capt. J. M. Vanderbilt, the superintendent, at once got up steam on the company's tugboat Favorite, and started with his family post-haste to Sitka for aid from the naval commander. The Indians endeavored to cut off the Favorite, but failed.

As soon as Vanderbilt reported the facts to Commander Merriman the latter put a howitzer and Gatling gun on the Favorite, sought the co-operation of the revenue-marine steamer Corwin, then in port, and as early as practicable, with a force of about one hundred marines and sailors, started himself for the scene of action, picking up his large steam-launch on the way. I accompanied the expedition.

Upon arriving at the lagoon matters were found exactly as represented by Vanderbilt; the men still prisoners; the Indians increasing in force and very much excited. Commander Merriman lost no time in arresting the ringleaders, and got the two principal chiefs of the tribe on board the Corwin, and informed them that, instead of the Northwest Trading Company paying anything to them, he should inflict upon them a fine of four hundred blankets, payable the next morning, under the penalty of having their canoes destroyed and principal village shelled and burned.

So temporizing has been the policy pursued within the past two years by the Navy toward the Siwashes that they evidently thought this a game of bluff. They were surly and impertinent, and affected not to think Commander Merriman would put his threat into execution. They, however, took the precaution to make use of the intervening night in taking to a place of security their large canoes and valuables.

The punishment has been most severe, but eminently salutary, and in my judgment the very thing that was needed, and unhesitatingly, in my opinion, is the prompt and energetic action of Commander Merriman to be applauded, and this occasion is sought to express great confidence in the result of his action and general management of the Indians since he has been on this station.

Owing to the heavy draught of water needed for the Adams, the presence and co-operation of the Corwin were most opportune.

The conduct of Lieutenant Healy, in command of said vessel, is especially to be commended as that of an officer and a gentleman and a credit to the service. His officers and men conducted themselves well throughout the whole affair, and deserve therefor special mention.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS,
Collector.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I now yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE] for five minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with all that has been said in behalf of the necessity for the passage of this bill. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact it is substantially the same bill introduced by myself in the Forty-seventh Congress, and which only lacked, I believe, two votes of passing the House by a two-thirds majority on a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. The same question was then raised in regard to certain provisions of the bill, and, in the haste of a thirty-minute discussion only, a doubt was raised in the minds of some of the members, and for that reason the bill failed of the necessary two-thirds vote to pass it. But it has been changed in that respect. Those sections then claimed to be subject to the construction sought to be placed upon them have been modified so that it is not possible now for any renewal of objections.

Other supposed objectionable features in that bill have been entirely removed and the bill has generally been perfected in several respects, and there certainly can be no reasonable opposition to its passage in its present form. It is desirable, of course, that steps should be immediately taken to provide a civil government for the people living in that Territory, deprived as they now are of all benefit of law, and I hope that this House will not delay longer that justice which should be accorded to the people of that portion of our domain.

As I believe a general disposition prevails to pass this bill I shall not further consume the time of this committee, and I hope no objection will be urged.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a single word on the only point about which there has been a little doubt with reference to this bill. This is not a complete Territorial organization. It does not propose to provide more than a preliminary form of government. This bill provides for an executive very simple and a judiciary extremely simple, and in lieu of providing legislative authority for that Territory, which will have to be done at some time, it adopts the legislative authority, as it now exists, of Oregon, and creates a code of laws to operate for the time being. I apprehend, then, that Congress by this bill reserves to itself not only the power to modify these laws at any time, but the power to establish new laws as they shall be advised of their necessity and the result of the working of the present system by the officials now for the first time to be put into that Territory. I therefore accept gladly the provisions of this bill as far as they go, and hope that they will be regarded in the nature of an apology to the people whom we have for so many years absolutely neglected in the protection of their rights, their liberty, and their property.

Mr. GEORGE. The gentleman from Iowa is most certainly correct in the construction he places on the present bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the establishment of some form of civil government for the Territory of Alaska. But I wish to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on the Territories, whether it has ever occurred to them that the provision of this bill giving the right of a jury trial may possibly prevent the efficacy of any civil or criminal proceeding in the Territory? In a Territory where there are only some eight hundred white persons from whom to draw the panel there would seem to be difficulty in the way of proceeding in many instances by a jury trial. It occurs to me that what we want in that Territory, and what would probably be eminently satisfactory until the population becomes more dense, is executive authority to enforce the law, a criminal judge to punish crime, and also a tribunal to decide questions of right between man and man. And of course the simpler the organization you can have for this purpose the better. Would it not therefore be better to give the judge the absolute right of trial? I am aware that it is objectionable and not in harmony with our theory of government, but under the circumstances had we not better make this as simple as possible?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I would say that it is always unsafe to trust arbitrary power in the hands of any one person; and it is right everywhere wherever the American flag is a symbol of power in this country that the right of trial by jury should be preserved.

Mr. GLASCOCK. Is it not a constitutional requirement that it shall be preserved?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. But if there are only eight hundred white persons scattered over a Territory equal in extent to one-sixth of all of the other Territories combined, will it not be difficult to carry into effect the provisions of such a law?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I will state to the gentleman that these courts will be held at only two or three different places in the Territory, at which points a large number of white people reside. I do not think there will be difficulty in carrying it into effect then. Besides that, the moment you establish law the white population will increase.

Mr. GEORGE. Besides, let me say this jury feature is modified so as to require but six jurors in civil cases.

But the gentleman from Illinois, I think, is wrong in regard to his statement with reference to the difficulty of enforcing this provision by reason of the scattered condition of the population of the Territory. While it is true that they are scattered, yet they are gathered together in settlements in places where white people reside. They are generally over all parts of the Territory, and when we speak of them as scattered it is because the towns are far apart. But where these courts are to be held there are sufficient numbers of white people to answer all the purposes of the bill.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I now ask that the bill be read by sections for debate and amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the territory ceded to the United States by Russia by the treaty of March 30, 1867, and known as Alaska, shall constitute a civil and judicial district, the government of which shall be organized and administered as hereinafter provided. The temporary seat of government of said district is hereby established at Sitka.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed for the said district a governor, who shall reside therein during his term of office and be charged with the interests of the United States Government that may arise within said district. To the end aforesaid he shall have authority to see that the laws enacted for said district are enforced, and to require the faithful discharge of their duties by the officials appointed to administer the same. He may also grant reprieves for offenses committed against the laws of the district or of the United States until the decision of the President thereon shall be made known. He shall be ex officio commander-in-chief of the militia of said district, and shall have power to call out the same when necessary to the due execution of the laws and to preserve the peace, and to cause all able-bodied citizens of the United States in said district to enroll and serve as such when the public exigency demands; and he shall perform generally in and over said district such acts as pertain to the office of governor of a Territory, so far as the same may be made or become applicable thereto. He shall make an annual report, on the 1st day of October in each year, to the President of the United States, of his official acts and doings, and of the condition of said district, with reference to its resources, industries, population, and the administration of the civil government thereof. And the President of the United States shall have power to review and to confirm or annul any reprieves granted or other acts done by him.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would suggest an amendment, if the gentleman from South Carolina will permit me, in line 9 of the second section. After the word "committed," in this line, I will suggest the insertion of the words "in said Territory." Otherwise it will be seen that in construing that clause of the act the governor of the Territory may grant reprieves for offenses committed anywhere in the United States.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. It is a mere verbal amendment, as I understand it, and there is no objection so far as I am aware.

Mr. KASSON. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he thinks that amendment is important. I think it is the inevitable construction of any judge; but if the amendment is not an important one I will suggest to him that it would be better perhaps not to send this bill back to the Senate for a mere formal amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I had not noticed that it was a Senate bill that we were considering.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman I am sure will agree with me that the court will construe the meaning of that language.

Mr. HOPKINS. It was a mere verbal amendment, and under the circumstances suggested by the gentleman from Iowa I withdraw it.

The Clerk read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and hereby is, established a district court for said district, with the civil and criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, and the civil and criminal jurisdiction of district courts of the United States exercising the jurisdiction of circuit courts, and such other jurisdiction, not inconsistent with this act, as may be established by law; and a district judge shall be appointed for said district, who shall, during his term of office, reside therein, and hold at least two terms of said court therein in each year, one at Sitka, beginning on the first Monday in May, and the other at Wrangel, beginning on the first Monday in November. He is also authorized and directed to hold such special sessions as may be necessary for the dispatch of the business of said court at such times and places in said district as he may deem expedient, and may adjourn such special session to any other time previous to a regular session. He shall have authority to employ interpreters, and to make allowances for the necessary expenses of his court.

No amendment offered.

The Clerk read the fourth section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That a clerk shall be appointed for said court, who shall be ex officio secretary and treasurer of said district, a district attorney, and a marshal, all of whom shall, during their terms of office, reside therein. The clerk shall record and preserve copies of all the laws, proceedings, and official acts applicable to said district. He shall also receive all moneys collected from fines, forfeitures, or in any other manner except from violations of the custom laws, and shall apply the same to the incidental expenses of the said district court and the allowances thereof, as directed by the judge of said court, and shall account for the same in detail, and for any balances on account thereof, quarterly, to and under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. He shall be ex officio recorder of deeds and mortgages and certificates of location of mining claims and other contracts relating to real estate and register of wills for said district, and shall establish secure offices in the towns of Sitka and Wrangel, in said district, for the safe-keeping of all his official records and of records concerning the reformation and establishment of the present status of titles to lands, as hereinafter directed: Provided, That the district court hereby created may direct, if it shall deem it expedient, the establishment of separate offices at the settlements of Wrangel, Oonalaska, and Juneau City, respectively, for the recording of such instruments as may pertain to the several natural divisions of said district most convenient to said settlements, the limits of which shall, in the event of such direction, be defined by said court; and said offices shall be in charge of the commissioners, respectively, as hereinafter provided.

No amendment offered.

The Clerk read the fifth section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That there shall be appointed by the President four commissioners in and for the said district, who shall have the jurisdiction and powers of commissioners of the United States circuit courts in any part of said district, but who shall reside, one at Sitka, one at Wrangel, one at Oonalaska, and one at Juneau City. Such commissioners shall exercise all the duties and powers, civil and criminal, now conferred on justices of the peace under the general laws of the State of Oregon, so far as the same may be applicable in said district, and may not be in conflict with this act or the laws of the United States. They shall also have jurisdiction, subject to the supervision of the district judge, in all testamentary and probate matters, and for this purpose their courts shall be opened at stated terms and be courts of record, and be provided with a seal for the authentication of their official acts. They shall also have power to grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of restraint of liberty, which writs shall be made returnable before the said district judge for said district; and like proceedings shall be had thereon as if the same had been granted by said judge under the general laws of the United States in such cases. Said commissioners shall also have the powers of notaries public, and shall keep a record of all deeds and other instruments of writing acknowledged before them and relating to the title to or transfer of property within said district, which record shall be subject to public inspection. Said commissioners shall also keep a record of all fines and forfeitures received by them, and shall pay over the same quarterly to the clerk of said district court. The governor appointed under the provisions of this act shall, from time to time, inquire into the operations of the Alaska Seal and Fur Company, and shall annually report to Congress the results of such inquiries, and any and all violations by said company of the agreement existing between the United States and said company.

Mr. EATON. I wish to ask my friend the chairman of the Committee on Territories if he is aware that by the laws of the United States the Secretary of the Treasury has the entire charge of the seal islands, which are nearly 2,000 miles from where the seat of government would be at Sitka, and that he by law is empowered to employ special agents to take charge of the fisheries? If so, it seems to me the giving this power to the governor would conflict with the power which the Secretary of the Treasury has now in his hands.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I was perfectly aware the Secretary of the Treasury had the charge of the seal fisheries and had an agent there; and if I had been framing the bill I might perhaps not have put in it all there is in it. But the committee, in order to avoid any doubt about the passage of the bill, took it just as it came from the Senate; and in order to insure its passage they would be glad to have it passed in that shape. I do not think the clause my friend from Connecticut objects to will matter materially. I think it can do no harm that the governor should have some supervision over those fisheries even if everything is correct and proper, as I have no doubt it is.

Mr. EATON. Here would be two sets of officers. One set are appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is still left in full control of this matter, and he appoints his special agents, more than one, more than two. Those agents make a thorough examination and report to the Secretary of the Treasury, and then power is given here by this bill to the governor that he shall from time to time visit these islands and report to Congress, Congress heretofore having given this entire power into the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. Reserving my right to offer an amendment, I do not propose at this time to do more than to call the attention of the House to what seems to me to be improper legislation. This whole matter is under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury subject to the advice of the Secretary of War; and it seems to me that giving the governor, who is 2,000 miles away from these islands, the power to go there and report to Congress instead of the Secretary of the Treasury, places this matter under a double set of officers, which in my judgment is not a sound principle.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I do not regard it as very material. The bill simply gives the governor power to go and make inquiries as to facts which he may report to Congress. If the agents of the Secretary of the Treasury happen to go wrong, the governor might happen to go right.

Mr. EATON. I want the House to look at this matter. I have constituents who are very deeply interested in it, owning two-fifths of the stock of this seal company, women and children, widows and orphans, and I do not desire that anything should be done here, nor does, I am sure, my friend the chairman of the committee, except what is exactly right and just. It seems to me the law is absolutely perfect now so far as the supervision of those seal islands is concerned. I would suggest to my friend that this clause happened to be thrown in in the Senate, as I understand, and it is put in the wrong place. It is put in this bill, not where it ought to be, under the powers of the governor, but it is put in another place of the bill. I suggest that it does not look like proper legislation.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I do not think it will hurt the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. What amendment does the gentleman from Connecticut propose?

Mr. EATON. I suppose I have the right to withhold the amendment until we go into the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It will depend on the House whether the amendment can then be offered.

Mr. EATON. Then I offer now the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 5, after the word "court," in line 28, namely, the following:

"The governor appointed under the provisions of this act shall from time to time inquire into the operations of the Alaska Seal and Fur Company, and shall annually report to Congress the results of such inquiries and any and all violations by said company of the agreement existing between the United States and said company."

Mr. GEORGE. I hope this amendment will not prevail for two reasons. In the first place it would necessitate the return of the bill to the Senate, and in the second place it seems to me it can do no harm for the governor of the Territory to investigate into the management of those seal fisheries and report to Congress.

Mr. STORM. I should like to ask the gentleman what are we to do here if we can not put amendments on Senate bills?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] is recognized.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to say that this bill has been very carefully considered. The committee gave very considerable attention and time to the interests of the Territory of Alaska. When this bill came before the committee it met with a very warm approval from all its members. The conclusions previously reached in the consideration of the question were found to be exactly in accordance with the provisions of this bill. I do hope there will be no amendments made and that the bill will not be sent back again to the Senate.

We have already neglected this people too long. It is almost a disgrace to our civilization as well as to this Government that those people have been left in their present condition for such a long period. I do hope gentlemen will permit this bill to pass and trust to the future for any additional provisions they may desire to make.

Mr. HENLEY. I move to strike out the last word.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut will not prevail. In the first place, it will be noticed by the committee that the governor under the section as it stands is simply authorized to annually report to Congress any violations by the Alaska Fur Seal Company of the law under which they hold their contract.

Information has come to me from what I consider the most unquestionable sources that this company has been in the habit of violating its obligations to the Government under its lease. I think, therefore, that it is exceedingly proper and should commend itself to the favorable regard of every one that there should be some provision in this bill, which proposes to constitute a civil government for the Territory of Alaska, to authorize an inquiry into any alleged violations by this company of its stipulations with the Federal Government. I think it eminently proper, peculiarly proper, that the governor who will be appointed under the provisions of this bill, being located near the islands occupied by this company, should be authorized to investigate their operations, because of the isolated geographical location of these seal islands, there being no near communication with any authority except the government which it is proposed to be created by this measure.

Mr. BLOUNT. What violations are charged?

Mr. HENLEY. I am asked what violations have been charged. The violations that have come to my ear, and in an authenticated form, are that the company does not follow its contract strictly in the matter of selling liquors to Indians, which is interdicted under the law; also in the matter of exceeding the number of fur seals to which they are limited under their lease, and in various other particulars. By their lease they are restricted to the killing of 100,000 fur seals, and the company alleges that they do not exceed that number. I have been advised to the contrary.

And allow me to state to the House that there is now pending before the Committee of Ways and Means a resolution introduced by myself providing for a full and thorough investigation of the operations of this company, and that resolution is and has been desperately and systematically fought by this company. This fact, to which I call the attention of members of the Committee of the Whole, carries its own commentary. This company shrinks like scorched parchment from any investigation.

Mr. EATON. One word. My friend from California [Mr. HENLEY] does not intend of course to misstate anything, but he is mistaken nevertheless with regard to the operations of this company. In no instance, at no time, in no year, have they taken more than 100,000 fur seals. It is not for the interest of the company that they should take more than the number which they are authorized to take under their lease.

What makes this company a profitable company? And it is very profitable; there is no doubt about that. It is that they take these seals with the utmost care. The company has already paid into the United States Treasury over $5,000,000. It is true the company itself has also made a great deal of money, because, as I have said before, they have managed the business with a great deal of care. They are business men. Were everybody allowed to go there, did the Government throw open these seal fisheries to everybody, there would not be a seal there in twenty-four months, and all the sealers agree to that statement.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. EATON. With great pleasure, if I can.

Mr. WEAVER. Will you tell what objection you have to the reporting to Congress of any violation of the law by this company?

Mr. EATON. I have no objection to any violations of law being reported by the proper officers.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all that is proposed by this provision.

Mr. EATON. This matter is now under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he has his special agents for the purpose. Do you want to run two classes of agents, two classes of men? I say no; that is not proper or just. Relieve the Secretary of the Treasury of all this business, if you want to put it into the hands of another party; but do not have two sets of men running counter to each other, if you please. I do not believe it is good legislation to have two sets of officers to execute the same law. The Secretary of the Treasury is all powerful now in this matter; he has his agents and makes his examinations annually.

Mr. WEAVER. Is there anything further provided by this section than to report any violations of the law by this company?

Mr. EATON. No; but I say it is unnecessary; utterly so, in my judgment.

Mr. HENLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. EATON. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. HENLEY. The objection urged by the gentleman is that under the law as it stands now the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make investigation as to the violations of law by this company, and he may communicate to Congress any violations of law by the company. Suppose now that we authorize some one else to investigate and communicate to Congress any violations of law; who is going to be hurt?

Mr. EATON. That is the question, is it; "Who is going to be hurt?"

Mr. HENLEY. Certainly; we have two men to watch instead of one; that is all.

Mr. EATON. We have four now. Good, sound, common-sense legislation will be hurt the very moment you put two classes of officers to overlook one subject. Such at all events is my idea of legislation. If the matter is not now in proper hands when it is in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, who can call upon the Secretary of War at any time, then change it; but do not set two animals hunting the same fur seal when one is enough. In my opinion we want but one set of hunters.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I hope this amendment will not prevail I do not myself know anything about the facts in this controversy. On that point I do not understand there is any difference between my friend from California [Mr. HENLEY] and my friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON]. My friend from California simply states what he understands the facts to be, and my friend from Connecticut does not deny that such are the facts.

It is said that under the bill we shall have two sets of parties looking into this matter. Well, Mr. Chairman, this fur company is a big institution according to my information on the subject. The Secretary of the Treasury has already sent a number of agents—I do not remember how many, whether two or four or six—to investigate and report upon this matter. But it may turn out in this as in a great many other instances that somebody ought to watch those who are sent to watch others. Nobody will question the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury; but he is in Washington, these agents are in Alaska. Somebody may be needed to watch these parties, and I would prefer to have them watched by somebody who is not interested in the seal company. Under the bill the governor of the Territory will have nothing to do in this matter except simply to inquire and report; and he will not report to the Secretary of the Treasury but to this body; so that we shall get our information directly from the officer to be created by this bill. Neither the government of Alaska nor the Government of the United States will be injured by having these parties properly supervised. If the charges which have come to my friend from California are untrue, no injury will be done by having them investigated; on the contrary, these parties will have a much better standing before Congress with reference to legislation affecting that Territory.

I hope the provision of the bill will not be struck out, but will be retained, so that the governor of this Territory may have full power to inquire and make report directly to Congress on this subject.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. EATON, it was not agreed to.

Mr. BUDD. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I have now in my hand the report from the Treasury Department in regard to the shelling of the Indian village which I spoke of some time since. The circumstances are just as I stated them. In order to show that there is no law in force in that Territory, I will incorporate this report in my general remarks. It appears that the general order issued April 13 was not to enforce any law except the liquor laws and the laws against killing seals.

The circumstances stated in this report are these: During the afternoon of September 23, 1882, a man was killed by the explosion of a bomb. Captain Merriman thereupon went down and demanded of the Indians four hundred blankets. These not being furnished he destroyed some forty of their canoes and all their houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. What was the action of the Treasury Department upon that matter?

Mr. BUDD. The Department stated that this was the information it had received; that more particular inquiry would be made into the affair and the result communicated to Congress. That was on December 5, 1882.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has that been done?

Mr. BUDD. On the 20th December the letter of the collector, William G. Morris, was referred to Congress. It confirms every statement in that report. This report is furnished by one of the men who shelled the village, and consequently may be expected to be colored in their favor. But notwithstanding this these reports show this to have been the greatest outrage ever committed in the United States upon any Indian tribe.

Mr. BLOUNT. What I wished to know was whether the Government had ever taken any action upon the matter.

Mr. BUDD. That is about all the action that was ever taken. I do not understand that anything else was done, and Captain Merriman is still a commander in the Navy.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I hope we shall now go on with the bill.

Mr. PETERS. Is the same person still in command?

Mr. BUDD. I understand he is. I wish to state that Lieut. M. A. Healy is not in the least to blame in this matter, and made a most proper report.

I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the marshal for said district shall have the general authority and powers of the United States marshals of the States and Territories. He shall be the executive officer of said court, and charged with the execution of all process of said court and with the transportation and custody of prisoners, and he shall be ex officio keeper of the jail or penitentiary of said district. He shall appoint four deputies, who shall reside severally at the towns of Sitka, Wrangel, Oonalaska, and Juneau City, and they shall respectively be ex officio constables and executive officers of the commissioners' courts herein provided, and shall have the powers and discharge the duties of United States deputy marshals, and those of constables under the laws of the State of Oregon now in force.

SEC. 7. That the general laws of the State of Oregon now in force are hereby declared to be the law in said district, so far as the same may be applicable and not in conflict with the provisions of this act or the laws of the United States; and the sentence of imprisonment in any criminal case shall be carried out by confinement in the jail or penitentiary hereinafter provided for. But the said district court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all cases in equity, or those involving a question of title to land, or mining rights, or the constitutionality of a law, and in all criminal offenses which are capital. In all civil cases, at common law, any issue of fact shall be determined by a jury, at the instance of either party; and an appeal shall lie in any case, civil or criminal, from the judgment of said commissioners to the said district court, where the amount involved in any civil case is $200 or more; and in any criminal case where a fine of more than $100 or imprisonment is imposed, upon the filing of a sufficient appeal bond by the party appealing, to be approved by the court or commissioner. Writs of error in criminal cases shall issue to the said district court from the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon in the cases provided in chapter 176 of the laws of 1879; and the jurisdiction thereby conferred upon circuit courts is hereby given to the circuit court of Oregon. And the final judgments or decrees of said circuit and district court may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to amend the section last read by inserting after the word "force," in line 2, the words "or hereafter enacted by the said State of Oregon;" so as to make the section read:

That the general laws of the State of Oregon now in force, or hereafter enacted by the said State of Oregon, are hereby declared to be the law in said district, &c.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It does not seem to me necessary; and its adoption would necessitate sending the bill back to the Senate. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly the amendment is not necessary. Besides, this Congress has no means of knowing what sort of laws Oregon may pass hereafter.

Mr. BUDD. Under this amendment the State of Oregon will have power to pass laws for the government of Alaska. It in effect delegates to the State of Oregon legislative control over this Territory.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his amendment?

Mr. ELDREDGE. No, I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the said district of Alaska is hereby created a land district, and a United States land office for said district is hereby located at Sitka. The commissioner provided for by this act to reside at Sitka shall be ex officio register of said land office, and the clerk provided for by this act shall be ex officio receiver of public moneys, and the marshal provided for by this act shall be ex officio surveyor-general of said district; and the laws of the United States relating to mining claims, and the rights incident thereto, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be in full force and effect in said district, under the administration thereof herein provided for, subject to such regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Interior, approved by the President: Provided, That the Indians or other persons in said district shall not be disturbed in the possession of any lands actually in their use or occupation or now claimed by them, but the terms under which such persons may acquire title to such lands is reserved for future legislation by Congress: And provided further, That parties who have located mines or mineral privileges therein under the laws of the United States applicable to the public domain, or who have occupied and improved or exercised acts of ownerships over such claims, shall not be disturbed therein, but shall be allowed to perfect their title to such claims by payment as aforesaid: And provided also, That the land, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres at any station, now occupied as missionary stations among the Indian tribes in said section, with the improvements thereon erected by or for such societies, shall be continued in the occupancy of the several religious societies to which said missionary stations respectively belong until action by Congress. But nothing contained in this act shall be construed to put in force in said district the general land laws of the United States.

No amendment being offered, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the governor, attorney, judge, marshal, clerk, and commissioners provided for in this act shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their respective offices for the term of four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified. They shall severally receive the fees of office established by law for the several offices the duties of which have been hereby conferred upon them, as the same are determined and allowed in respect of similar offices under the laws of the United States, which fees shall be reported to the Attorney-General and paid into the Treasury of the United States. They shall receive, respectively, the following annual salaries: The governor, the sum of $3,000; the attorney, the sum of $2,500; the marshal, the sum of $2,500; the judge, the sum of $3,000; and the clerk, the sum of $2,500, payable to them quarterly from the Treasury of the United States. The district judge, marshal, and district attorney shall be paid their actual necessary expenses when traveling in the discharge of their official duties. A detailed account shall be rendered of such expenses, under oath, and as to the marshal and district attorney such account shall be approved by the judge, and as to his expenses by the Attorney-General. The commissioners shall receive the usual fees of United States commissioners and of justices of the peace for Oregon, and such fees for recording instruments as are allowed by the laws of Oregon for similar services, and in addition a salary of $1,000 each. The deputy marshals, in addition to the usual fees of constables in Oregon, shall receive each a salary of $750, which salaries shall also be payable quarterly out of the Treasury of the United States. Each of said officials shall, before entering on the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath that he will faithfully execute the same, which said oath may be taken before the judge of said district or any United States district or circuit judge. That all officers appointed for said district, before entering upon the duties of their offices, shall take the oaths required by law; and the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable to said district, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby extended thereto; but there shall be no Legislative Assembly in said district, nor shall any Delegate be sent to Congress therefrom. And the said clerk shall execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in the penalty of $10,000, for the faithful performance of his duties, and file the same with the Secretary of the Treasury before entering on the duties of his office; and the commissioners shall each execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in the penalty of $3,000, for the faithful performance of their duties, and file the same with the clerk before entering on the duties of their office.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move pro forma to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina a question. This bill creates quite a number of salaried officials and in other respects provides for the creation of considerable expense against the Government of the United States. I ask my friend what are the total revenues of the United States from all sources from the Territory of Alaska? What do they amount to in the aggregate?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. When I was up before I said the Government received $317,000 annually for the seal fisheries from the Alaska Commercial Company.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What are the net aggregate revenues for a year?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I do not know of any other except a small amount of customs duties at Sitka; I do not know how much they amount to, but I believe something like eight or ten thousand dollars a year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hold in my hand a report of the special agent of the Treasury Department for the year 1874. He makes the statement that the annual revenue derived by the Government from the Territory of Alaska amounts to $300,000 a year.

Mr. KASSON. It must have increased since then.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, in the nineteenth line, after the words "United States," to strike out the following words:

The district judge, marshal, and district attorney shall be paid their actual necessary expenses when traveling in the discharge of their official duties. A detailed account shall be rendered of such expenses, under oath, and as to the marshal and district attorney such account shall be approved by the judge, and as to his expenses by the Attorney-General.

I wish to call the attention of my friend from South Carolina to the fact there is a new departure here in providing that the district judge, marshal, and district attorney shall be paid their actual and necessary traveling expenses. It is a new departure and not provided for elsewhere. It seems to me, with the ample salaries given in this bill, paying the marshal, instead of by fees, $2,500 a year, and considering the comparatively small amount of business to be done, this provision can hardly be justified on the part of the committee. I trust my friend from South Carolina will consent to strike it out. The judge, district attorney, and marshal can do all the traveling required for their limited duties without this departure from the uniform practice.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I hope my friend will not insist upon his amendment, or, if he does, that it will be voted down. This is a new Territory and the means of traveling are limited.

Mr. KASSON. And the distances are great.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Necessary traveling expenses should be paid out of the Treasury. Unless there is some good reason I hope no amendment will be made, as it will send the bill back to the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is barely an excuse for passing this bill. The Indian population there are getting along as well as could be expected under the safeguard and protection of our Government. That there is little white population is manifest, and there will not be——

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Will not be unless they are protected.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a small population during the summer season of some four or five hundred. There are some civilized Indians who are doing reasonably well. The duties of these officers I suppose will be almost sinecures. By introducing a feature like this in the bill you will be certain to have abuses. I submit that a salary of $3,000 for the governor and judges and $2,500 for the marshal and district attorney are ample, without holding out additional inducements for questionable charges in the way of transportation. As this provision is not incorporated in reference to other States and Territories I hope it will not be insisted upon in this case.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I would like, with the permission of the gentleman from Indiana, to ask him a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Is it not clear that in so large a Territory as Alaska, where the white people are scattered necessarily far apart, or congregated in villages far separated from each other, that to compel these officers who are assigned to the duty specified in this bill to pay the expenses of their transportation out of their salaries would be an obstacle in the way of rendering services important and necessary? It seems to me that it would.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from California think that there will be a large amount of business to be done for many years to come by them?

Mr. ROSECRANS. I will answer the gentleman in this way: that from my own knowledge of the people, from their occupations—being largely employed in mining—there will be considerable travel necessary to mark the mines out, and probably occasional disturbances among the whites, which experience shows occur frequently in new settlements. It is probable, therefore, that these officers will have considerable traveling to perform.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend say that the deputy marshals, when the commissioners are to be located at these four different places, will have much traveling to do? There are, I believe, four commisioners provided for, with deputy powers, and four deputy marshals, and there are but four points indicated in the bill where any act of a judicial character is to be performed; but to enable the commissioner or the judge to perform the duties (in fact at only two places, as I find by reference to the bill) does my friend think that the amount of travel will be very considerable which these officers will be called upon to perform?

But, sir, especially do I object to introducing a new feature which is so readily abused. I would rather, for my part, increase the amount of the salaries—although in my judgment I think they are high enough for the duties required—than to permit this departure from our present system. And I think you will find in the main that the object for the organization of your government and the appointment of a large number of officers there is to aid the fur seal company which obtained control of the two great islands on that coast.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that statement. There are other duties which these officers would necessarily have to perform, and their traveling expenses must be considerable and ought to be paid.

Mr. LORE. I most heartily concur with my friend from Indiana as to the propriety of the adoption of the amendment suggested by him. The introduction of any provision into this bill to meet the necessary traveling expenses of these officials is, in my opinion, vicious in principle. I have had some little experience in the fee system myself, and I think throughout our entire country the disposition is to go back again to the salary plan.

This opens the door to any amount of "necessary" traveling expenses, in a Territory like this, which may be enormous in extent, entirely according to the will of the incumbent of the office. It opens the door and gives inducements to enlarge expenses. The principle is a vicious one. I would much prefer, and it occurs to me it is in harmony with our practice, if this salary is not sufficient, that we should increase it and make it enough to cover the expenses which we deem reasonable and proper—to give a reasonable fee. I apprehend it is entirely within the knowledge of this committee to determine what would be a fair compensation not simply for the service to be rendered, but for the expenses necessarily incurred. It is with great reluctance that I would see ingrafted or connected with any office created by this Congress that principle of paying expenses. It affords too much temptation to weak men.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will not my friend from Delaware allow me to suggest that the facts brought to the knowledge of Congress by investigations made on the part of the committee to inquire into the expenditures in the Department of Justice show beyond question that you can not enter upon legislation like this without opening up very broad avenues for fraud?

Mr. LORE. There is no question of that, sir. And there is another difficulty. You also multiply the accounts to be acted upon by the Departments here. You not only open the door to extravagance, but you create another list of accounts which must come to the respective Departments to be visèed by the officers who are here. In every respect, sir, and every phase of this question, it is objectionable. It introduces a vicious system; it inaugurates another series of accounts to be audited and passed upon by the officers here. It not only enlarges the avenues of corruption, but increases unnecessarily, and I think improperly, the accounts which have to be audited by the officers of the Government.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw the amendment if the gentleman from Arkansas desires to be heard and he will renew it.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I do not desire to renew the amendment. I want to be heard upon it. I think my friend from Indiana, as well as my friend from Delaware, are both laboring under a misapprehension upon the subject involved in this bill. This bill does not provide that the deputy marshal shall be paid anything for traveling expenses.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no intimation of that kind. Reference was made to judge, marshal, and attorney.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. This bill provides in a former section that two terms of the court shall be held, one at Sitka and the other at Wrangel. Will my friend from Indiana tell me how far it is between these two points?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not recollect at this moment.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Will my friend from Delaware tell me?

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. The distance is about one hundred and sixty miles.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That is two hundred miles less than I should have guessed it at. These two courts are nearer to each other than I had anticipated. The object of the provision of this bill to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objects is to allow the judge, marshal, and district attorney, while traveling between these two points to hold court, their expenses. My friend says these are large salaries. He says $3,000 is a large salary for a judge. I say, Mr. Chairman, if the judge who shall be appointed is competent to fill the place that is a small salary. The gentleman says there is but little business. We can not tell what business there will be in that country when the laws of the United States are extended over it. Besides that, it is an expensive country to live in, and the office a most important and responsible one.

The gentleman says this is a new departure. It is not a new departure. In point of fact, in years gone by, where two courts have been held in the same district, it has been the usual practice to allow the judge, marshal, and attorney their expenses in traveling between the one court and the other. And that ought to be done all through the United States until we come to the point of paying decent salaries to our Federal judges.

The district judge in the eastern district in my own State has a salary of $3,500. I undertake to say he has not a superior to-day on the district bench of the United States. He gets a salary of $3,500, and has had to travel perhaps five hundred miles while holding his courts in two different points in the district, for until recently the route has been circuitous. This is but a small salary when you consider the intelligence and character required in a man who is fit to preside over such a court. And as I have said, if the judge who shall be appointed is fit to hold the position at all $3,000 is a small salary, and he ought to be allowed the incidental expenses of traveling from one point to another. I do not see at all what immense flood-gates will be thrown open for frauds if the judge, the district attorney, and the marshal shall be paid their expenses in traveling from one point to another in the discharge of their duties. It is a wise provision, and one which should not be changed.

Mr. LORE. May I ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. LORE. Would it not be a better arrangement to give a judge a sufficient salary than to allow him expenses?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. If we were in possession of information as to what would be the necessary expenses in traveling from one point to another we might do that. But can my friend from Delaware tell me anything about the mode of traveling between those two points? Gentlemen here can not tell that any more than in reference to a country they had never heard of.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I may state that this bill provides that special sessions of the court may be held at other points; and the distance to Oonalaska is 1,200 miles.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. So much stronger, then, is the argument that this provision should be embraced in the bill. If it is not, the whole salaries of the judge, marshal, and district attorney may be absorbed in traveling in the discharge of their duties. Shall we provide for the appointment of these parties to discharge important duties, and then require them to absorb their entire salaries in traveling from one point to another? I say it is not sound policy; it is not good sense; it is not wise legislation. And considering how little we know of the circumstances of this Territory, I think it the wiser and more prudent course that the system provided by the Senate in this bill should be adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Wright.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 282) granting a pension to A. M. Wilson;

A bill (S. 670) granting an increase of pension to N. J. Ingersoll;

A bill (S. 1339) granting a pension to Frank Gray; and

A bill (S. 2169) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army of the United States, upon the retired-list of the Army.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdrew my amendment, supposing the gentleman from Arkansas would renew it. If he did not do so, I now renew it myself.

I can not consent that the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas touching the poverty of these salaries should go without some answer. The gentleman speaks of $3,000 for the judge, $2,500 for the district attorney, and $2,500 for the marshal as being beggarly salaries. I do not see why he should apply to them such a term. The gentleman does not think that these officers should be required to travel one hundred and sixty miles to attend courts unless the cost of that travel should also be added to their salaries? My friend from Arkansas makes a very different speech before his constituents if he represents the salaries as paid by this Government as small salaries—a very different speech from what gentlemen making a race for Congress are accustomed to make in the region of country I have the honor in part to represent. My friend asked me a question in geography. Let me ask him one in political economy. What is the average compensation received by the field laborers of this country, and by men of skill in the various fields of labor in the mine and the workshop and at the forge? What is their average compensation?

Mr. BRENTS. It is a good deal more in Alaska than it is in Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the average earnings of our people? Not one-fifth as much as these salaries.

And yet my friend thinks that a salary three or four times as large as the average earnings of our people is a poor salary to be given to an officer, and that no man of any degree of competency could be expected to take the place with such a meager compensation. I undertake to say that the salaries which are given the officers of our Government are large salaries, so enormously beyond the average compensation which our people receive in their various industries that all that is surprising to me is that the masses of the people of this country have not long since risen up and demanded that they should be reduced to the fair average compensation which men are able to earn in other than Government employments.

Why should it be said, by any Democrat at least, that the salaries of our public officers, of men who have the honor of holding public positions, and who in addition to the moneyed motive have the motive of holding office, that higher motive of honor in a public position—why should it be said that the salaries of such men should be so enormously beyond the average compensation which men are able to earn in employments requiring cultivation, intelligence, skill, and industry? Can it be said that salaries are small when they are so enormously beyond the earnings of our people in the various industries of life? No, sir; the salaries paid to our public officials are disproportionately large, and the labor of the American people should not be taxed to pay salaries beyond what men are able to earn in callings requiring skill, integrity, and ability.

For one I protest against the pretense that any salary paid by the Government is disproportionately small to the amount of service required. I should be glad if my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] would remember that as you increase salarles you remove that higher motive for public employment which prevailed in former years under low salaries, that sentiment of honor derived from public employment which should rise entirely above any compensation other than that which is fair and reasonable for a given service, whether it be in public employment or in the private relations of life.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I have only a few observations to make in response to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I would submit to the intelligence and candor of gentlemen present whether or not we are to adopt as the standard of the salary of a Federal judge the compensation which a mere skilled laborer can obtain for his services. Is that the way we are to measure the value of the services of a man who has devoted his life to the study of a profession and has reached that point of distinction and reputation where he is selected from his fellow-citizens to fill a responsible position of this character? Sir, the question carries its own answer.

I have this to say in that connection, and I say it openly and boldly, and will go to my constituents upon it: that I am prepared whenever we shall reach the Senate bill on the subject to vote to increase the salary of every Federal judge in this country to $5,000 a year. That is little enough to secure that character and intelligence which ought to be possessed by a man selected to preside upon the Federal bench of this country.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from Arkansas think that integrity and character will be promoted by introducing into public employment a mercenary motive instead of the sentiment of honor?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I listened to my friend from Indiana while he was speaking, and I hope he will pay me the same compliment now and not endeavor to make my speech. Let me say to him in this connection that the facts are against his argument. In the circuit in which I myself live we have had within the last ten years the unseemly exhibition of two Federal judges resigning their positions in order that they might in some other employment make money enough for the support of themselves and their families. No man stood higher on the bench than Judge Dillon, but he retired from that high and important position, important to us and to the country, in order that he might enter into the employment of a corporation which would give him for his services and intelligence sufficient to secure a living for himself and his family; and his successor, Judge McCrary, retired from the same position for the purpose of entering the employment of a corporation.

And in my own State within the last three years we have had the exhibition of nearly one-half of the circuit judges retiring from the bench mainly because the salaries which they received were so inadequate that they were unwilling to remain upon the bench in justice to themselves and their families.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the sooner such judges retire the better for the public service.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I trust the gentleman will adopt my suggestion, and make his own speech in his own time. That may be his opinion; it may not be correct; gentlemen will differ. I have another suggestion to make in that connection. It is a common argument upon this floor that we can always obtain men to perform certain services for some low salary that is proposed. Yes, we can, but it is not always demonstrated that we can get as good men, men of as high character, men of as much integrity, men of as great capacity and fitness for the positions as those who retire from high and honorable places in the public service to take private employment for better remuneration. For this reason, if for no other, I would attach to the judicial office a salary ample to retain in the public service persons fully qualified and eminently fit for the office; persons who, appreciating the distinction attaching to the judicial office and freed from the care and anxiety always felt by right-thinking men concerning their private interests, would in the end adorn the bench and honor the public service and the country. I want to see the temptation to them to retire from honorable place and go into the service of corporations removed. It will elevate the bench and honor the country if we adopt that policy.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy but a moment's time, but wish to make a few remarks in the line of those just concluded by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. A few moments ago I endeavored to secure recognition with a view to making some of the points so ably covered by the gentleman to whom I have referred, but will now content myself with a reference to one or two considerations which I deem of importance in connection with the question of salaries of these officers.

In reply to the distinguished gentlemen who are objecting that the salaries proposed to be paid to these officers are too large, or large enough without allowing traveling expenses when engaged in the discharge of their official duties, I desire to remind the gentlemen that, as they well know, we are dealing with a new Territory which the bill proposes to organize. The work to be done, then, is foundation-work for the future, and while it may not promise much in the way of results, while the location of the Territory and the character of the inhabitants may not seem to justify anything like liberality in the appropriations of money for the payment of salaries to officials, yet if anything is to be done in the way of providing civil government for Alaska, it seems to me, sir, that it is worth while to do well what is to be done, even though it may appear probable that the results may not meet the present expectations of the friends of this measure. For my part I regard it the solemn duty of this Congress to make speedy and adequate provision for the establishment of a civil government within that Territory, and the education and civilization, in so far as may be possible, of the natives inhabiting that country. The success of the effort and purpose to establish a government there and plant the seeds of an American civilization in the minds and hearts of the people will depend much upon these first steps now being taken in the direction indicated.

Now, shall we provide salaries for these officers who are to undertake this work which will be entirely inadequate to induce men of character and ability to seek the positions to be created by the bill? Shall we make these salaries so inadequate that none but political adventurers will desire the appointments; or will Congress provide such salaries as will operate to induce men of intelligence and reasonable ability to desire these places of responsibility, and thus make it probable that the affairs of the government and the people living there will be in good hands?

The men who fill these offices should be competent and reliable; they should be almost as good men as the average Congressman, if not better. And what member of this House, let me ask, even were he seeking official position, would desire to accept any one of those named in this bill upon the salary therein provided?

It must be admitted that the prospect is not an inviting one. The men who become the officers of the government under this bill, if it becomes a law, must leave their homes in the States, where they have long enjoyed the comforts and advantages of civilization. They will go to a bleak, barren land, and there remain, while holding these positions, surrounded by the most unfavorable and uninteresting conditions. If they have wives and children, they too, unless left behind, must submit to the disagreeable circumstances incident to such surroundings; and, sir, I am free to give it as my opinion that the provisions of this bill as to the salaries to be paid are not too liberal for the services and sacrifices demanded of those who will receive them if this bill becomes a law, and I hope, therefore, that the proposed amendment will be rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend know that generally the persons appointed to these Territorial judgeships are lawyers who do not earn in their profession more than $1,000 or $1,500 a year?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Without occupying time, I ask for a vote on the amendment, which I hope will be voted down.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the remaining sections of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 10. That any of the public buildings in said district not required for the customs service or military purposes shall be used for court-rooms and offices of the civil government; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to instruct and authorize the custodian of said buildings forthwith to make such repairs to the jail in the town of Sitka, in said district, as will render it suitable for a jail and penitentiary for the purposes of the civil government hereby provided, and to surrender to the marshal the custody of said jail and the other public buildings, or such parts of said buildings as may be selected for court-rooms, offices and officials.

SEC. 11. That the Attorney-General is directed forthwith to compile and cause to be printed in the English language, in pamphlet form, so much of the general laws of the United States as is applicable to the duties of the governor, attorney, judge, clerk, marshals, and commissioners appointed for said district, and shall furnish for the use of the officers of said Territory so many copies as may be needed of the laws of Oregon applicable to said district.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior shall select two of the officers to be appointed under this act, who, together with the governor, shall constitute a commission to examine into and report upon the condition of the Indians residing in said Territory, what lands, if any, should be reserved for their use, what provision shall be made for their education, what rights by occupation of settlers should be recognized, and all other facts that may be necessary to enable Congress to determine what limitations or conditions should be imposed when the land laws of the United States shall be extended to said district; and to defray the expenses of said commission the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make needful and proper provisions for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race, until such time as permanent provisions shall be made for the same; and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for this purpose.

SEC. 14. That the provisions of chapter 3, title 23, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the unorganized Territory of Alaska, shall remain in full force, except as herein specially otherwise provided; and the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors in said district, except for medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes, is hereby prohibited, under the penalties which are provided in section 1955 of the Revised Statutes for the wrongful importation of distilled spirits; and the President of the United States shall make such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for Alaska, had directed him to report back the same with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I demand the previous question on ordering to a third reading the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 316) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharina T. Wunsh; and

A bill (S. 1369) to prevent and punish the counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, or other securities of foreign governments.

ADMISSION OF TERRITORIES AS STATES.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I now call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 216) in relation to the admission of Territories as States into the Union.

Mr. BRENTS. I make the point of order that this bill is not in order under the resolution fixing the order of business for this day. That resolution excludes bills of this character.

The SPEAKER. According to the recollection of the Chair the order referred to excludes the consideration of bills providing for the admission of new States.

Mr. BRENTS. This bill makes provision for the admission of Territories as States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order, after which the Chair will decide the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, April 8, and Tuesday, May 13, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Territories; not, however, to include any bill for the creation of new Territories or the admission of new States.

The SPEAKER. Unless this bill provides for the admission of some new State into the Union it is not excluded by the language of the order just read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter no Territory shall form a constitution or apply for admission as a State into the Union until it shall contain a population equal to that required in a Congressional district in order to entitle it to representation in the House of Representatives.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories, to insert the word "permanent" before the word "population," was also read.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDEMAN].

Mr. HARDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported from the Committee on Territories unanimously. We do not think there is any necessity for its discussion, as the proposition is a plain and clear one. It simply recognizes the right on the part of Congress to express in this form its opinion that a Territory before it is admitted into the Union as a State should have a population equal to that of a Congressional district entitled to a Representative in this House. We hold it to be unjust for a small portion of the population of the country residing in a Territory to be represented not only in this House but to have in addition two Senators in the other House, thus giving a small part of the population in the country three votes in Congress and three votes in the electoral college, when for a much larger number of our population a Congressional district has only one vote. This theory, Mr. Speaker, was recognized in the compact between the States, and it was agreed there should be in this House representation according to population, while in the other House representation should be according to the States. So far as the pending measure is concerned the Committee on Territories have only given expression to this well-recognized theory of our Government. We say, therefore, that a Territory when it comes to be admitted into the Union as a State should have at least the same population required for representation on this floor. We do not believe there is any justice in thirty or forty thousand people being allowed a Representative in this House when 150,000 people are required for a Representative from any of the States.

Now, this particular feature of the pending proposition has been recognized in other bills. Gentlemen may say it will not bind future Congresses. That to some extent may be true, but it puts people on their guard, it puts the Territories on their guard. It tells them that a certain number of population will be requisite before they can be admitted as a State into the Union. It was conceded, as I have already said, in the compact between the thirteen States that representation in this House of Representatives should be according to population. This is only carrying out that theory. That compact was agreed to by the larger States in the Union in consideration that representation in this House should be according to population, while in the Senate it should be according to States.

But the committee does not propose to argue the question. They submit it for the action of the House, and if there be no objection we propose to let it go through. If, however, there shall be objection we propose to be heard on the subject. If there is to be objection and debate is to proceed, I will yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] who introduced the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will hear me for a single moment.

Mr. HARDEMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. KASSON. There is one very serious objection, and I think a very sufficient one to this bill. It imposes one sort of restriction upon the future action of Congress in admitting under a constitution satisfactory to it any Territory as a State into the Union. That can not bind Congress. This bill goes on the theory it can bind Congress, and it attempts to bind the people. My second objection is that it is wrong. It is in spirit unconstitutional, inasmuch as it denies to the people of a Territory the right to petition in its highest form. That highest form is the assemblage of the people of a Territory of this Union to consider their interests and declare the conclusion they have come to in the embodied form of a constitution and to present it to the Congress of the United States.

My great objection in the form in which the bill provides for certain results is that it prohibits the people who are pro tanto sovereign in the Territories from embodying their rights in the form of a constitution and presenting it here with their petition to be admitted as a State of the Union.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that there is no provision in this bill like that to which he refers. The people of the Territory can always petition Congress, and they do petition Congress; but, sir, the Congress simply says in this proposition, "We lay it down as a rule, as a part of the programme of the Representatives of the people, that before we will hear a petition of a Territory—that they may make their petition if they please—but before we will hear it we will require a Territory previous to admission as a State into the Union to have the same number of population required for representation for a Congressional district in one of the States; that it must have a population equal to the existing ratio of representation."

In the Senate, in reference to the admission of Colorado, the same principle arose. A question was asked of Mr. Wade, then in the Senate, in reference to the binding force upon future Congresses of the provision relating to the qualification of voters, namely, that the word "white" should be stricken out and should not be in any other bill, and it was agreed to by the Senate and put in the bill that Congress should pass no enabling act without this provision. So we do not say to the Territories, "You shall not come here to petition;" but we do say, in justice to what is required of every State in the Union, "We will not give you a Representative on this floor for twenty-five or thirty thousand and give you besides two Senators in the Senate and three representatives in the electoral college." There is no justice in it. This is the position which has been taken by Senator Buckalew and others.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to proceed a little further.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Georgia has given me his time and I will reserve it or I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa if he prefers.

Mr. KASSON. I will postpone what I have to say. I recognize the right of the gentleman from Illinois to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not wish to take the floor from the gentleman from Iowa at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time occupied by the gentleman from Iowa does not come out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve my time.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say I think the gentleman from Georgia does not yet appreciate the actual scope of the bill which he advocates. It reads:

> Hereafter no Territory shall form a constitution or apply for admission as a State into the Union until, &c.

Now, it can not even come before Congress under the conditions of this bill with an application. If that is not a denial of the rights of the people of the Territory to petition Congress in important matters affecting their interests, I do not know what it is.

What have been the precedents in Congress? Congress has always reserved to itself the right to act upon the emergencies and the necessities of the occasion as they may arise. Congress has always entertained a petition, whether in the form of a constitution presented, or a resolution of a Territorial Legislature, or in any other proper and respectful form, and reserved to itself the right to hear and decide upon the application of the people of the Territories.

But this bill declares that the people of the Territories shall not even make an application to Congress. I hold, sir, that you are putting the people of the Territories, therefore, under a ban of slavery without precedent, touching any portion of the people of the United States, by passing this bill; and it is absolutely useless, for any subsequent Congress may repudiate this law and entertain both their petition and the presentation of a constitution should they form one.

Suppose that the people of a Territory, notwithstanding your prohibition, do meet in general convention and form a constitution. How will you punish them? What penalty will you impose? Where is the provision in your bill that precludes them from the exercise of that sovereign right—I may call it squatter sovereignty in memory of old times? How will you manage to enforce the prohibition you seek to impose? It is nothing more than the passage of a mere resolution on the part of the House of Representatives as to what is expedient to do. It can have no other effect.

But, sir, I protest against putting a law upon the statute-books that says the people of the Territories shall not have the privilege of applying for anything that they think it their interest or duty to demand at the hands of the Congress of the United States. You might as well say that they shall not apply for the passage of further Territorial laws. You may restrict them in any other improper way, you may deny them anything you please, if you may deny them this last sovereign right of the citizens to get up their prayer and ask for admission as a State in the Union.

We have admitted California without a particle of preceding action. We have allowed hitherto every Territory in the Union to present an organic act for our approval and admission as a State; but now for the first time you take a new departure, and seek to deny to any Territory the right even to say to Congress in the form of a constitution what they desire, and further you deny to them the right of an application to Congress for admission into this Union as a State.

I think, sir, I do not misapprehend the provisions of this act. The people of a Territory shall have neither the power of forming a constitution nor the right to prepare a petition for admission as a State until certain conditions exist. That is the provision of the bill; and when you enact the law it is futile and without effect, because you can not enforce it by any penalties upon the people of a Territory. Besides, you can not bind another Congress as to whether it shall entertain the application, if made, or not. I hope the House will construe this on the principle which will be admitted on every hand, that it is a declaration in the form of law which denies the people of the Territory one of the customary and what I will call constitutional rights of the people to lay before Congress their wants and petition them for a political organization.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege since I have been in Congress to vote upon the admission of some half a dozen States into this Union. The question debated by the gentleman from Iowa is therefore no new question to me. The gentleman from Iowa seems to take the old ground which we of the Douglass time took on the Kansas-Nebraska and Lecompton constitutions in favor of Territorial, or squatter or popular sovereignty against the attempt of Congress on the Wilmot proviso inhibiting slavery. The gentleman seems to be arguing now in favor of the old Douglas Democracy and against the right of Congress to say what shall be the conditions of the admission of a State into this Union.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I lay down this rule as one that will not be questioned: that under the Constitution of the United States every law made here is revocable by the power that made it, subject to the Constitution.

This declaratory resolution as offered by the gentleman from Illinois has no power to bind a future Congress or this Congress if they choose to repeal it and substitute another. But it has and must be considered to have some force and effect, moral if not legal, for the direction of the people of the Territory in forming their constitution. In this it follows the precedent of the ordinance of 1787, and it follows other precedents laid down here by resolution in this Congress after the great contest in the Kansas-Nebraska matter.

Mr. KASSON. I think there is no precedent.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think I could find a resolution passed by this House similar to this one, where Congress declared no Territory should be admitted as a State into the Union unless there was a ratio sufficient at least for one member of Congress. It is a good rule. It is a pity we had not worked on that rule when we came to admitting Nevada, which is now even losing its population instead of gaining. It is the anomaly of our Government that Nevada with a population not large enough for one member of Congress has the power in the Senate of New York with her five or six millions of population. If we can not in our apportionment and distribution of Federal power and in drawing a dividing line between Federal and State supremacy—if we can not lay down a rule that there must be at least a population sufficient for one member of Congress, we may be subject hereafter to such a system as may lead in the end to the disruption of our old-time State-rights autonomy.

I am in favor of this bill because it will have moral emphasis. I am in favor of it because it does not interfere with popular or squatter sovereignty. It allows the people of the Territory, subject to the Constitution—subject to this rule, if you please—to come here with their constitution made in pursuance, if you please, of this direction of Congress. There is nothing in this bill to inhibit a Territory having a population less than the 150,000 ratio from coming here with a constitution. But it is in the same condition, or in pari passu, with an enabling act by Congress, whereby we have frequently, as in the second act with relation to Kansas and Nebraska, enabled Territories to come forward and be admitted as States sometimes on proclamation to be made by the President or on their complying with certain conditions, and sometimes by enabling the Territory, under the direction of Congress, to prepare its organic law and come here for admission.

I am in favor, therefore, of this bill because it is not anything but a fair, just restriction upon Territorial or popular sovereignty. And it is fair to the people of the larger States of this Union, who have a right to demand here that at least a sufficient number of people shall be in the Territories when they come forward and ask to fix their star beside the other stars in our constellation.

Mr. KASSON. I will read to the gentleman from New York the clause of the Constitution to which I referred:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Allow me to say this is the highest court to which the people can come for the redress of grievances or when they wish to change the form of their government. And I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to what I think he has yet failed to see. When the bill says the people shall not apply even for admission as a State until so and so, I think it violates the spirit of the Constitution and attempts to bind Congress in the exercise of its power under the clause which gives the right for the admission of States.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will answer the gentleman from Iowa, in the first place, by saying when the Constitution was made the makers of it never contemplated a Territorial form of government for our outlying Territories. Where the word "territory" is used in the Constitution it is used to apply to the property, not to the form of government.

Mr. KASSON. Do you not remember the Northwest Territory? That was before the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. COX, of New York. That was under the ordinance of 1787. I remember all about it.

Mr. BRENTS. You have a good memory. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman from Iowa says this violates the right of petition. The right of petition, Mr. Speaker, is almost obsolete in this country anyhow. We merely put our petitions in a box. The free press of this country is the medium by which Congress is reached now. But the right of petition is not invaded by this bill. Will the gentleman from Iowa, or will any man, woman, or child who is aggrieved by anything done in this country bring forward their grievances in the form of petitions and put them in that box?

Mr. KASSON. But when a Territory wants to claim admission as a State you say by this bill they shall not do it unless under certain circumstances.

Mr. COX, of New York. We do not interfere with the right of petition.

Mr. POLAND. I will ask my friend from New York what he supposes will be the precise legal effect of this bill if it becomes a law?

Mr. COX, of New York. It will be moral mostly, just as the effect of other laws is which you have made before and which are moral in their effects. The great distinguishing line between the party so ably represented by the distinguished jurist from Vermont and the party I speak for is that whereas we have endeavored by legislation to make laws binding and legal, the gentlemen on the other side generally claim to represent a party of high moral ideas irrespective of legality.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Yes, you are trying now to get on our ground.

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes, I am treading somewhat on your ground.

Mr. POLAND. Suppose this bill should pass and become a law, and at the very next session of Congress, or during this very session of Congress, a Territory with a less number of people than is here prescribed should apply for admission as a State and Congress should see fit to admit it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have already answered that question by saying—and I quote Jeremy Bentham on it, and I am sure my friend from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] will remember, where he says that there is no such thing in this country or in any country, and ought not to be, as an irrevocable law. All laws should be revoked at times when people desire it. Even our Constitution is revocable by the prescribed mode; and under the Constitution all the laws which we make are revocable.

One generation should not bind another; that is democracy. One generation has not all wisdom; wisdom does not die with any one generation. One Congress can not bind another. The next Congress can wipe out this law at its pleasure. I concede all that; and yet I insist there is much of emphasis of direction, of force in a measure like this for the continuance of our own good order, which, when we come down to it, is really that there shall be so many people in a given Territory for the purpose of representation, fixed by the ratio established in the apportionment of representation by Congress.

Mr. PETERS. Can not the next Congress ignore this bill entirely?

Mr. COX, of New York. I have just said that I believe it can; and God only knows what a future Congress will not do if you have the control of it.

Mr. CASSIDY. And you would prohibit the people from coming here with a regular constitution and form of government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would inquire, Mr. Speaker, how much time I have left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDEMAN] occupied fifteen minutes of the time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] occupied ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair included that in the fifteen minutes. There is forty-five minutes remaining to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will reserve that time.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. And I yield to the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS].

Mr. BRENTS. I regret most profoundly that this bill has been called up in a day set apart for the consideration of legislation in the interest and for the benefit of the Territories. Unquestionably it can be of no benefit whatever to the Territories, nor, I think, to any one else. It is mere brutum fulmen; it can amount to nothing. This same Congress, when it meets to-morrow, may admit a Territory as a State without the population required by this bill.

The Constitution of the United States is not yet a hundred years old. In that Constitution the fathers provided for the admission of new States. They threw around that provision no restriction whatever; they left it to the judgment and to the conscience of each Congress when any Territory should apply for admission as a State to determine all the questions involved—the question of population, their number, their character, their wealth, and their ability to sustain a State government as a member of this Union. This bill proposes to limit and restrict a power which under the Constitution is unlimited and unrestricted, and is therefore unconstitutional.

It was then the spirit of the day that the people should be allowed to govern themselves; and so when the ordinance of 1787 was enacted by the Congress of the Confederation for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, while the constitutional convention was still in session, they made provision that when any of the districts, as they were called in the ordinance, should have 60,000 free inhabitants it should be entitled to admission as a State in this Union.

That same provision was extended to the territory south of the Ohio River which afterward became the State of Tennessee. When Tennessee applied for admission the provision authorizing admission with 60,000 free inhabitants was in force. I have here a special message sent to Congress on the 8th of April, 1796, by the first President of the United States, recognizing that compact made with the people of that territory. I will read a portion of it:

Gentlemen of the Senate and of the House of Representatives:

By an act of Congress passed on the 26th of May, 1790, it was declared that the inhabitants of the territory of the United States south of the river Ohio should enjoy all the privileges, benefits, and advantages set forth in the ordinance of Congress for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio.

* * * * * * *

Among the privileges, benefits, and advantages thus secured to the inhabitants of the territory south of the river Ohio appear to be the right of forming a permanent constitution and State government, and of admission as a State by its delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, when it should have therein 60,000 free inhabitants:

* * * * * * *

That message is signed by George Washington. That same provision has been extended to the whole of the original Territory of Oregon, which included the present State of Oregon, the Territory of Washington, the Territory of Idaho, and a portion of the Territory of Montana. Now, if you undertake to pass this bill, you will do it, so far as that Territory is concerned, in direct conflict with the compact you have made with those people.

There was a lengthy debate on the bill for the admission of Oregon. It was universally admitted that this provision of the ordinance of 1787 applied to that Territory. Therefore when Oregon applied for admission it was contended by the lamented Alexander H. Stephens, who had charge of the Oregon bill, that the compact was extended to that Territory by the provisions of the fourteenth section of the act of August 14, 1848, and that the Territory was entitled to admission as a State at that time with 60,000 free inhabitants. The representative unit at that time was 93,423; but Oregon was admitted upon the plea that not to admit her, if she had 60,000 free inhabitants, would be a violation of the compact.

Now, as I said a moment ago, the Constitution is not yet one hundred years old. The fathers in their wisdom saw fit to throw no restriction around Congress in deciding upon the application of new States for admission, but left the matter to their own wise discretion unrestrained. In that time twenty-five States have been admitted into this Union. Of those twenty-five Maine and West Virginia were formed out of portions of States previously existing. Texas prior to entering the Union was an independent republic. Vermont, I believe, was a colony of New York, and Kentucky a colony of Virginia. With the exception of these States all the rest have been formed from territory of the United States.

At the time of the formation of the Constitution the representative ratio was 30,000. If that ratio had continued until the present time this House would now contain some 1,600 or 1,700 members. But at each successive decade, with one exception I believe, the representative unit has been increased. If the membership of this House had not been enlarged from sixty-five to three hundred and twenty-five, the present number—five times as large as it was originally—the representative unit at this time would be 759,532; and if this number were now the representative unit, and the rule now proposed were applied to new States, this would be the population required of any Territory before being allowed to participate in the Government of the United States. Under such a rule how many of the States do you suppose would be excluded?

But even upon the present representative basis there are now two States in this Union which by the last census have not the requisite number to entitle them under the theory of this bill to a Representative in this House. Delaware, one of the original States, has not for more than thirty years had the number proposed now to be required for admission into the Union. The State of Nevada has not perhaps one-fifth, certainly not more than one-fourth, of the requisite number.

Why do you propose to make this discrimination against these new States that are coming up from the West? Why do you propose to lay down a rule which will in the future completely close the door against the admission of new States—States formed out of the territory of the United States, composed of citizens of the United States—persons entitled to participation in your Government, as declared in the ordinance of 1787, at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. Speaker, I had not intended nor am I prepared to enter into a full discussion of this question; but it seems to me that this bill if passed will be not only a useless declaration amounting to nothing in the world except for its "moral effect" of which my moral friend from New York [Mr. COX] speaks, but if it is to have any force or effect hereafter, it will operate with great injustice and as a limitation of the power conferred by the Constitution in the admission of new States.

My own Territory is now an applicant for admission into the Union. So far as that Territory is concerned, however, I want it understood that this act can not harm her, because we have the requisite population.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What did the census show?

Mr. BRENTS. It showed our population to be at that time 75,000 and a little more. But there is no question that at the present time we have population sufficient to entitle us to a Representative on this floor. Do you propose under these circumstances to exclude us by reason of the insufficiency of our population as returned by the last census? Do you propose to keep us out for that reason for the next ten years? Even at the end of that period if the aggregate membership of this House be reduced or allowed to remain where it is, the representative ratio may be so increased that even with 200,000 or 300,000 population we may still be excluded.

The gentleman's own State, Illinois itself, when the ratio was only 35,000, had not that number, but came into the Union with 34,620. By the previous census it was only 12,282. That State at the time of its admission had less population than any other State ever had upon admission into the Union, and yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is the author of this bill.

What population have the several States had at the time of their admission? Vermont came in with a population of 85,425. Kentucky came in with 73,677, of which number 12,430 were slaves, five of whom under the old constitutional basis counted as only three persons; so that Kentucky had only about the 60,000 free inhabitants required. Tennessee came in with an estimated population of 67,000, 7,000 of which number were supposed to be slaves. At her previous census, however, she had a population of only 35,691.

Ohio came in with 45,365. Louisiana came in with 76,556, of which number 34,660 were slaves. Indiana came in with 63,897. By the previous census it was 24,520. Mississippi and Alabama constituted before admission the Mississippi Territory, which by the preceding census had a population of only 40,352, of which 17,088 were slaves. Those two States had extended to them the 60,000 free-inhabitant clause. In fact that clause was extended to all the territory that belonged to the United States at the time of the formation of the Constitution. It was even extended to the Orleans Territory, so far as the original Territory of Orleans was concerned. Every Territory had extended to it at the time the Constitution was formed the guarantee that it should be admitted when it had 60,000 free inhabitants. Illinois came in, as I have said, with only 34,620 population. By the preceding census she had only 12,282, yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] comes here now and proposes to close the door against all Territories of the United States which have not now 151,911 population! Generous, indeed!

Missouri was admitted in 1821 with 66,557, of which 10,222 were slaves. That was sixty-three years ago.

Since that time not a State has been admitted from a Territorial condition with a population by the preceding census equal to the ratio required for a Representative on this floor.

Arkansas came in in 1836, when the ratio was 47,700. By the previous census she had 30,388, of which 4,576 were slaves. It was estimated at the time of her admission that she only had some 33,000 free and 9,240 slave population.

Michigan came in with a population by the preceding census of 31,639, the ratio still being 47,700.

Florida came in in 1845, when the ratio was 70,680, when by the preceding census she had a population of 28,760 free and 25,717 slave, or 54,477 altogether. At that time, estimating three white persons for five slaves, she had not the requisite population for a member of this House by several thousand.

Iowa came in in 1846 with a population of 78,819—by the previous census 43,112, while the ratio was 70,680.

Wisconsin came in in 1848 with a population by the preceding census of 30,945.

California had less than the ratio even at the time of her admission, the ratio being 93,423 and her population 92,507.

Minnesota had only 6,077 at the time of her admission according to the preceding census.

Oregon, as I have already stated, came in with about 50,000 when the ratio was 93,473.

In that Oregon case there was this amendment offered to the bill by Mr. HILL, of Georgia:

That whenever it is ascertained by a census, duly and legally taken, that the population of the Territory of Oregon equals or exceeds the ratio of representation required for a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, Oregon will be received into the Union on an equal footing with the other States in all respects whatever.

Now, what was done with that amendment? It was voted down by a large majority. It received only 32 votes—13 Democrats, 11 Republicans, 8 Americans and Whigs. There were against the proposition a vote of 173—106 Democrats, 61 Republicans, and 6 Americans and Whigs. So the American or Know-Nothing party was the only party that ever did vote in favor of the application of this unjust rule requiring a Territory when admitted to have a population equal to the existing ratio of representation. Democrats expressly declared against it. Republicans voted against it. It is the only time except in the case of Kansas it was ever attempted. I have the vote here and I will insert it in my remarks to show the names of those who voted against the application of such a rule to a new State asking admission into the Union. It is as follows:

YEAS—Abbott, Blair, Boyce, Bryan, Chaffee, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Dick, Farnsworth, Gilmer, Hill, Keitt, Kellogg, John C. Kunkel, McQueen, Matteson, Maynard, Miles, Millson, Mott, Olin, Ricaud, Royce, Scales, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Stallworth, Trippe, Underwood, Vance, Walbridge, Zollicoffer—32; 13 Democrats, 11 Republicans, 8 Americans and Whigs.

NAYS—Adrian, Ahl, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Barr, Billinghurst, Bingham, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Brayton, Buffington, Burlingame, Burnett, Burns, Burroughs, Caruthers, Case, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chapman, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dewart, Dimmick, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gartrell, Gillis, Gillman, Gooch, Goode, Granger, Greenwood, Gregg, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hodges, Hopkins, Horton, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, Owen Jones, Keim, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, McKibben, McRae, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morgan, Morrow, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Pottle, Powell, Purviance, Reagan, Reilly, Robbins, Roberts, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Scott, Searing, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Stephens, Stephenson, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Vallandigham, Wade, Waldron, Walton, Ward, Cadwallader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Watkins, White, Whitely, Wilson, Winslow, Wood, Wortendyke, August R. Wright, John B. Wright—173; 106 Democrats, 61 Republicans, 6 Americans and Whigs.

I might go on, Mr. Speaker, at length with this record. In the case of Oregon Mr. Douglas admitted she did not have the requisite population. The fact is clear all through that the Congress of the United States has never committed itself to any such rule. It has been brought forward frequently, but it has been voted down overwhelmingly.

In the case of Kansas there was an act passed May 4, 1858, by which it was provided if Kansas would not submit to certain conditions in regard to the taxation of the property of the United States within that State it should not be admitted until it had a population equal to the ratio of representation. Kansas was not admitted under that act, and was admitted with less population than was required for a Representative on this floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman say that Kansas was admitted with less population than was required for representation?

Mr. BRENTS. I do.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman forget the fact that the English bill prohibited the admission of Kansas as a State into this Union until it had a population equal to the number required for representation upon the floor of this House?

Mr. BRENTS. But the gentleman from Illinois should also remember that Kansas was not admitted under that bill at all. And it was conditional even under that bill that if she should not consent to certain conditions propounded that then she should not be admitted. But that was taken back afterward; Congress never insisted upon the restrictions, and Kansas was consequently admitted finally with less than that population.

Kansas was admitted in 1861 by an act passed, I believe, in January of that year by a subsequent Congress to the one that passed the English bill, and she had at that time only 107,206 population, while the ratio of representation by the census of 1860 was 127,381. Nevada, Nebraska, and Colorado were all lacking in the population required by this bill, not only when the previous censuses were taken, but also at the dates of their admission. So that without taking further time on this point I say it has not been the practice of this Government to require any such population.

No such rule has been applied in the past, as I have shown in the few instances I have cited, and no such rule should now be laid down either for this or for the guidance of any future Congress; and, Mr. Speaker, it is manifest that it would be unjust to these communities themselves to impose such a restriction upon them. Under the restrictions imposed by this bill, it would leave many of them in a Territorial condition for years and years with a population adequate to maintain a State government. It is unjust to them when they have population and wealth enough to maintain a State government. It is contrary to the genius of our institutions that such a rule should be applied to a community of American citizens living on American territory, a restriction that would put them under the control of Congress and not allow them to have any participation whatever in the affairs of the Government under which they live. When we undertook to establish free government in this country it was our declaration to the world that that Government should apply to all the people so far as they were able to maintain their share and part in it, and when you talk of its being unjust to the older and more populous States, let me ask gentlemen can it be more unjust than in the instances of the inequality now existing between States already in the Union? Can it be any greater than the inequality between the States of Nevada and New York, or Delaware and Pennsylvania?

So far as the representation in the Senate is concerned it is based not upon population. There the State is represented as a corporate organization, as an independent political entity. It is represented without any regard whatever to its population, and if that be unjust the injustice lies in the Constitution itself which established that principle. If you are going to change that rule laid down in the Constitution you must change the Constitution itself; and if you are going to require States in this Union to have equal population you must commence to reform the whole theory and system of the Government itself. If you propose to apply a rule against the Territories that you can not apply to the States, you are certainly making an unjust discrimination against the Territories. You allow the State of Delaware to have representation on this floor, both in the Senate and in the House, with less population than some of the Territories have at this time, and yet Delaware was one of the original States. You have admitted, as I have said, many other States since then with less population than was required for a Representative in Congress. Why, it is even provided for in the Constitution itself.

It was contemplated by the convention that framed the Constitution that there might be States in the Union in the then future with less population than might be required for a Representative here, and they made provision to meet that contingency. There were none then; but the framers of the Constitution contemplated the possibility that such a condition in the future might arise, and they put in a provision in the second clause of the first article of the Constitution declaring "that the number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every 30,000; but each State shall have at least one Representative."

So that under the Constitution you allow the States that are in the Union with less than this population one Representative on this floor, and two in the other end of the Capitol; while the Territories, constituted of people of the United States, citizens loyal and true, deserving citizens of the United States, with far greater population, are denied representation here or in the Senate. You allow them no representation whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I will not take up the further time of this House to discuss this question. It is a useless, senseless, and unjust measure. If it were not entirely useless and inoperative upon the next Congress, or even upon this Congress, to-morrow morning I would probably ask permission to go into its discussion at some greater length. But it seems to me that you do not want to put forth a declaration to the people in the Territories, and to those who are contemplating going there, that if they do become citizens of the Territories they shall not have the right to come here and be admitted to statehood or to have any share or participation in our Government until they have reached this number, which we did not require of the States that now have Representatives on this floor and participation in the Government of our common country.

I yield now such time as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] may desire, after which I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KEIFER. After listening to all that has been said in opposition to this bill I need add but little. I have always since I have been a member of this body protested against the folly of attempting to put any sort of legislative restriction upon ourselves. It has been proposed in times past to enact statutes of limitation upon our own power, such as legislation prohibiting the Congress of the United States from passing certain bills or claims. I remember that but a few years ago we put in an appropriation bill a provision that there should be paid only the sum of $2,000 toward the expenses in a contested-election case; and before that bill was dry we allowed some $8,000 as the expenses on one side in a contested-election case.

But the proposition now coming from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is to limit the Constitution as well as to limit ourselves in this matter. It was inadvertently suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] who spoke a few moments ago that the Constitution did not contemplate the admission of new States into the Union. The gentleman surely can not have read the Constitution recently, for the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution commences thus:

New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union.

Here is an express power to admit States into the Union. It is proposed by this bill, Mr. Speaker, to take away the constitutional power of the Congress of the United States to admit States into the Union unless certain things happen. If we pass this bill it will have little effect, I am sure; but it will be a monument to our own folly in attempting to say that we should not except upon certain conditions do that which the Constitution of the United States enjoins upon us to do.

The bill says:

That hereafter no Territory shall form a constitution—

That is the first part of it: "No Territory shall form a constitution." I suppose that is intended to be construed as a restriction upon the right of the individual citizens of a Territory to assemble and form a constitution and memorialize the Congress of the United States to admit the Territory into the Union. Otherwise it is meaningless. And then the bill says—or apply for admission as a State into the Union until it shall contain a permanent population equal to that required in a Congressional district in order to entitle it to representation in the House of Representatives.

The people of a Territory are first prohibited from forming a constitution; secondly, they are prohibited from petitioning the Congress of the United States for admission into the Union unless it is ascertained that the Territory has a permanent population equal to that required in a Congressional district in order to entitle it to a representation in the House of Representatives. I believe the average population for a member of this body under the present law is 151,340. That is what must be ascertained to be a permanent population of the Territory before it can apply for admission as a State. Exactly what force and meaning are to be given to the word "permanent" I am not able to say. The population, I suppose it is meant, are to be in some way or other attached to the soil. They are to be people that are not movable. They must in some way or other have put their feet into the Territory or in some way got fastened there so that they can be called permanent. They must be people that would not dare to move away, that would not dare on account of any misfortune or under any circumstances to go off to any other country, or State, or Territory.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will my friend allow me to tell him——

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If he will look at the organic act admitting the State of Kansas he will find there the same words; and I have no doubt the same words are used in all the acts admitting other Territories as States.

Mr. KEIFER. I am sorry when the gentleman said he was going to tell me that he did not do so. What I wanted to know was the meaning of the word "permanent" as applied to population?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Consult Webster's Dictionary as to that.

Mr. KEIFER. I know what a permanent fixture means as applied to real estate. But what the expression means here I am unable to say.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose Congress passed this law and after that a Territory notwithstanding holds its constitutional convention and applies for admission into the Union and Congress admits it into the Union, what effect would this law have?

Mr. KEIFER. None at all. I am saying, and I have no doubt the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] agrees with me, the law would be simply a monument to our own folly. It could have no effect, no legal effect. And with due deference to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] now in the chair, I think it ought to have no moral effect of any kind. The people of the Territories when they believe their condition would be bettered, when they believe their government would be bettered by changing its form, have a constitutional right to apply to the Congress of the United States for admission into the Union; and as a step in the direction of applying they have a right to form a constitution and write it out and put it in shape and send it to Congress in order that it may be there judged of whether it provides for a republican form of government and is in other ways wise and such as ought to be a first constitution of a new State of this Union.

I do not believe that this is a limitation at all, and yet it is proposed in that form. What has happened that makes it important that we should put on this limitation now? Are we in danger in the present House of Representatives of doing anything so wise as admitting a Territory such as Dakota into the Union? Is the gentleman from Illinois or are other gentlemen inclined to think that unless they have a law against themselves or against the people some day or other during this Congress we may admit that Territory into the Union with a sufficient population now, judging by the population of other Territories when they have been admitted? It is not many years ago—eight years I believe, Mr. Speaker—since a Democratic House thought it was wise to admit the Territory of Colorado into the Union with a population then, I believe, of 43,000. I may not be exactly right, but it did not vary largely from that figure.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It had a much larger population than that.

Mr. KEIFER. It has not 100,000 population yet.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Oh, yes; Colorado has now one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. KEIFER. I was thinking of Nevada.

Mr. CASSIDY. Be a little easy on Nevada.

Mr. KEIFER. Colorado had a very small population, nothing like the number required by this bill. But a Democratic House rather hastily rushed through the bill admitting that Territory into the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And lost the Presidency by it.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Illinois says, and he may be right, that by reason of their folly then they lost the Presidency of the United States. It may be that gentlemen are afraid that in some unfortunate hour this House may undertake to do what it ought to do in wisdom, what we are empowered to do by the Constitution—admit some Territory into the Union as a new State—and thereby add votes on the Republican side to the electoral college. I can find no other reason for attempting this, if the gentleman will pardon me for saying so, exceedingly foolish legislation.

We can not in this Congress say that a future Congress shall not do what the Constitution gives us the express power to do, and hence I am justified in saying that to pass this bill would be exceedingly foolish and unwise. It has no purpose; it has no object. It may embarrass a few people if they want to assemble in a hall somewhere in the Territory of New Mexico or Wyoming or Washington or Dakota and there talk over what sort of a constitution they would wish to live under in future years. Should they assemble for that purpose some gentleman might come in and say, "There is the Townshend bill passed by Congress which says that you shall not speak or write on that subject; that your tongue shall be tied; that under that law, because the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] says it is to have a moral power on you, you are to be paralyzed, your hands shall not write and your tongue shall not speak on the subject of a State constitution until you have such data as will satisfy you that there is in your Territory a 'permanent' population of 151,000 people." That is the situation in which this bill will put the people of a Territory.

Now, when did it happen that a Democratic party or a Democratic body discovered that it was better to keep people in a Territorial condition than to allow them to have a State government? Some of us, since we have belonged to the Republican party, have always had the idea that the Democracy claimed that in this dual form of government of ours it was wise to have States, and that those States should have certain powers, even exclusive powers, and in many instances they do have exclusive powers, and those powers are in the interest of the people living within those States.

But here is a Democratic proposition to continue these Territories in a Territorial condition, under Territorial legislation, without any of the powers that belong to a State, without any of the local powers that belong to a State, with the right left, as it is in every instance, in the Congress of the United States to annul every law of the Territorial Legislature; and such a proposition comes to us with the indorsement of a committee of this Democratic House.

I now yield back to the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] whatever remains of the time which he so kindly gave to me.

Mr. BRENTS. I would inquire how much time I have left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. BRENTS. I will yield that ten minutes, or whatever portion of it may be desired, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. I have just come in from the law library while this discussion was going on and may repeat something that has been said by others, for I have not heard the debate that has taken place.

It occurs to me that this is unwise legislation; first, because it is an attempt by this Congress to bind another Congress in a way which can not be done. It seems to me to be entirely useless for us to say that another Congress may not admit a Territory as a new State until it shall have a certain population, when the question is one solely for the consideration of that other Congress. The passage of this bill would be entirely useless so far as any purpose of law is concerned.

And without having given the matter much consideration and thought, it occurs to me that it is unconstitutional legislation. The Constitution declares what shall be the qualifications of Senators and Representatives, and it has been uniformly held that neither Congress nor the States can add to or take from those qualifications. They are fixed by the Constitution. So by the Constitution Congress now has the power to admit new States, and the only restrictions upon that power are that it shall not make a State within the jurisdiction of another State, nor make a new State out of parts of other States, without the consent of those States. By parity of reasoning it would be unconstitutional for this House to undertake to put any other limitation upon the power of Congress to admit new States.

I grant that it is apparently a hardship to have new States represented in the Senate equally with large States when the new ones have very little population. But it was so under the old arrangement. Rhode Island has as many Senators as New York or Pennsylvania or Massachusetts. Whether we will as a matter of policy admit a new State is merely a question addressed to the particular Congress to which the petition is presented.

This bill proposes to say that a Territory shall not petition Congress for admission as a State without a certain amount of population. Well, Congress can admit a new State without a petition. The bill also says that a Territory shall not make a constitution. Why not? The present law is that a Territory may pass all laws not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, except that it may not do certain forbidden things, such as taxing the property of non-residents more than the property of residents and a few things of that sort which are forbidden by the general law.

What harm can there be in allowing a Territory to make a constitution, whether it can get into the Union or not? It may need a Territorial constitution. But as to the application for admission, you can not prevent petitions coming here. Anybody can petition. The Constitution declares that the right of the people to assemble and petition for a redress of grievances shall be inviolable. The Territory as a Territory need not petition. I may file a petition in behalf of the Territory. Nobody can prevent that; and Congress can act on my petition. It seems to me, therefore, that this proposed legislation is not only useless, but worse than that, it is unconstitutional.

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Speaker, have I any time remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. BRENTS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND] who introduced this bill to what I regard as a lack of precision in the language. It is of course only a resolution indicative of the sense of Congress; but it has the form of a bill, and should have the precision of a bill. It says that certain acts shall not be performed in a Territory unless that Territory has a "population equal to that required in a Congressional district in order to entitle it to representation in the House of Representatives." Yet there is no provision of law requiring that a Congressional district shall have any particular population in order to entitle it to representation in this House.

There is a provision in the Constitution that "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers;" but if all the Representatives in any State were to be elected on one general ticket it would be no violation of the Constitution. And when we come to the law on the subject, we find it simply declares that Illinois shall have so many Representatives, Ohio so many, &c., leaving each State to adopt its own division into districts as it may see fit, subject only to the requirement that this division shall be as nearly as practicable according to population. Yet we know that there is necessarily what is called "fractional representation," and it appears by a statement furnished to me by the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] that in Nevada there is a fractional representation of 62,000; in New York a fractional representation of 70,000; and so on. Gentlemen will find on reflection that of the three hundred and twenty-five districts supposed to be represented here, no two districts have the same population.

The question which I commend to the consideration of my colleague from Illinois is whether he intends that a Territory, in order to be entitled to admission, shall have a population equal to that of the least populous district represented on this floor, or that the required population shall be the average of the various districts? Would it not be simpler and more precise for him to specify in the bill 150,000 as the requisite number, if that is what he intends?

Mr. BRENTS. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to three minutes.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to talk beyond that length of time on this measure. It seems to me worse than ridiculous—almost criminal—to bring into this House for action at this time, when we have so large an amount of business which ought to be attended to, a bill which does nothing if you pass it, which amounts to nothing whether you pass it or not, and which does not claim to do anything after you pass it. [Laughter.] For a committee of this House to come in here and get a special order fixing a day for the purpose of attending to the wants and necessities of the Territories of the United States, and then to occupy the time of the House by undertaking to pass what, at the very best that can be said for it, is mere clap-trap without any sense, without accomplishing anything and without meaning anything, is, I say, a criminal waste of time.

If you pass this bill the next Congress will pay no attention to it. I know that one very distinguished gentleman says that the bill should be passed with a view to its "moral effect." "Moral effect" on whom? Who is getting immoral here? [Laughter.] We are not over on this side of the House. Whom do you want to improve in morals by this kind of legislation? Now think of it! When we ought to be attending to important business—such legislation as we have already passed to-day for the benefit of the Territory of Alaska, which was certainly a good bill—after doing that you propose for "moral effect" to take up this resolution, which is simply for buncombe, and nothing else. I would like to have my friend who introduced the bill tell us what there is in it but "buncombe." I will listen with the greatest attention, for if there is anything else in it I can not find it.

The bill accomplishes nothing; it is binding upon nobody, it affects nobody. If passed it would not even be binding upon this Congress. We might pass it to-day and yet to-morrow without any infringement of the Constitution and without any violation of morality, we might admit any Territory, regardless of population, if we could get the votes to do it. What do we accomplish by this bill except to waste the time of the House when it ought to be engaged in attending to the business of the country?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I can not quite agree this bill will be utterly useless. I hope it will be of some use. I hope it may serve the purpose of announcing to the country that the Congress of the United States recognizes the injustice of longer pursuing a course which invites populations less than the ratio of representation for one member upon this floor to balance and control and negative, it may be, the policy of this great Union, if not in this at least in the other end of the Capitol. We have gone too far already in administering the Government in this particular; too far in denying the vast populations and vast interests of the great States their just influence and their equal share in proportion to their population. They should have an influence in this Government as far as possible under the Constitution equal to their population and importance.

I think, sir, it is time to recognize in Congress and to announce it from the Congress of the United States that it is to be the policy of the country, at least so far as this particular Congress is concerned, that the great populations of the great States are not to be overridden and their just influence denied by admitting States on the frontiers with one Representative on this floor and two in the Senate, when they have scarcely population enough to make a respectable town in one of the older States.

Look for a moment at the influence of these States in the other end of the Capitol as to the treaty-making power, and the power intended to be a portion of the appointing power of the Executive. I regret to say they have arrogated to themselves the power of controlling the executive functions and action of this Government.

This bill can do no harm in giving this notice to the Territories of the country. It simply says to them: "You will not be admitted here according to the judgment of Congress as a State until you have a population sufficient to entitle you to one Representative on this floor." To my mind any other course is monstrously unjust to the older States of the Union.

I believe in the moral effect of the bill, and I would pass it if for no other purpose than to give that notice to the country.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. POTTER. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York this question. Now, in getting up a cry like this, is it not equivalent to saying to the great Territory of Dakota we are not willing to admit it as a State into this Union, although that Territory may have a population of one-half million? Is it not a subterfuge to prevent doing what we ought to do in reference to the people of the great Territory of Dakota? Is it not a mere resolution expressive of opinion, and is not this debate a waste of time?

Mr. POTTER. When Dakota comes here with a population showing that she is entitled to one Representative in Congress, I trust she will be respectfully heard.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. She has half a million of population to-day.

Mr. POTTER. We will discuss that matter when it comes up. She is not affected. She is outside of this bill. So far as this bill has any authority it is a declaration she is outside of its provisions.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is the very question I desired to ask the gentleman from New York. Is this resolution anything more than saying it is our opinion such and such a thing ought not to be done? We really are wasting a day which ought to be devoted to the consideration of Territorial matters, and it is done for the purpose of discussing a resolution which is nothing more than buncombe.

Mr. POTTER. If we succeed in making those Territories believe they have something else to do than use up their time and efforts in attempting to get into the Union as States, to exercise unjust powers and unequal privileges over the older States of the Union, I think we will have accomplished something. I hope the House will express its opinion in this respect, and prevent as far as possible the coming forward of schemes on the part of these Territories for representation larger than that possessed by the older States.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield now for two minutes to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. EVINS].

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I hope, Mr. Speaker, the House will vote on this question and let us get to something else. I desire to say in reference to the present bill I entertain the same opinion I held in reference to it in committee. It is merely an expression of opinion. The people of the Territories will have the constitutional right to petition Congress, and Congress can do as it pleases in the matter. That is all I desire to say in the two minutes allowed me, hoping, in conclusion, the House will proceed to vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I shall waste no time in answering the tirade of abuse and ridicule sought to be heaped upon this bill by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR]. It is very evident, sir, that he does not understand the nature, the purpose, or the effect of the bill. But it is no fault of mine; nor is it the fault of the Committee on the Territories that he does not understand the bill. The Almighty himself is the only one to blame for that misfortune under which he labors.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, means much. If the gentleman—and I understand him to state himself that he is not a lawyer, but if he was a lawyer and capable of understanding the plain English language written here, he would be the last man on this floor to use the terms that he has used in reference to it.

Mr. HORR. I only said in reference to it what was said by the chairman of the committee himself.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Please do not disturb me, my friend. I shall occupy but very brief time upon this point. I apprehend, sir, if the gentleman from Michigan had been present when the great declaration of human rights was adopted, our Declaration of Independence, he would have taken the floor and asserted that it too was mere buncombe and humbug, and that that great assemblage of the American people should not waste its time upon sentimental and mere moral declarations that had no force or effect.

What is in the bill? There is nothing in the bill, as was said here by the gentleman who sits behind me, in the direction of putting a restraint upon the power of Congress. Nothing whatever that can be construed in that direction. My friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] need not lose any sleep upon the dread apprehension which seems to oppress him, that by this bill we intend to limit the power of a subsequent Congress. There is no such purpose in the bill. There is nothing in the bill which would warrant such a construction. I presume the gentleman knows that it would be absurd and useless to attempt to pass a law imposing a restriction or a limitation upon the constitutional power of Congress. There is, therefore, no such purpose in the bill. We come then to the question, What does it contain? And I here make the assertion that no man possessing a legal mind will say that it does more than put a limitation upon the power of the Territorial authorities. It is a law limiting the action of the Territories in their corporate capacity or in their official capacity. That is what it means, and that only.

The bill, sir, then puts a limitation, a legal limitation and restriction, or restraint, upon the action of the Territorial authorities for certain specified purposes. The question then arises, Has Congress the power to do that? Looking to your Constitution I say that it has. I invite your attention to that Constitution to see whether or not it clearly shows that Congress has plenary power, absolute power, to put any limitation, any restriction, or any restraint that in its wisdom it may see proper upon the Territorial authorities. Here is the language of the Constitution:

> Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

They are entirely within the power of Congress. Now, sir, this bill means to enact a law, not simply as we are told here a sentimental declaration without effect or force, but a law. The Territorial authorities are created by an act of Congress. They have no vitality, no power, no capacity to act except by virtue of Congress. The creator of this power, then, has it within its power to diminish, restrain, or limit it. It may modify the power conferred upon the Territories, or it may annihilate or undo their work in the Territories. We do not in the slightest degree interfere with the power and right of Congress to act. Congress may at its next meeting—the next Congress may on its own motion—admit any Territory as a State into this Union. It does not deprive Congress or attempt to limit its power in that direction. It applies alone, then, to the authorities in the Territories, not to the action of Congress whatever. It takes no such steps; it has no such purpose; it refers solely to the Territories.

Mr. HORR. How is Congress going to find out when there are inhabitants enough in a Territory under your bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Congress will judge of that for itself when it deems it proper to admit a Territory into the Union. But we say to the squatters in the Territories, "You shall not present an application here for admission, or form a constitution, or ask the admission of your Territory as a State until you have put yourselves upon an equality with the people in the older States." We say to these people in Montana and the other Territories, "You shall have the rights guaranteed to the people of the different Congressional districts in this Union; but you shall have no greater right than they possess." What is their right? My people in Illinois have a right of representation here when we can show that we have for each Representative about 153,000 population.

Mr. MORRISON. How much did we have at first when the State was admitted?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We are not now discussing the question whether Illinois was properly admitted into the Union or not. That is not a question for our present consideration, but the question with which we are now dealing is whether we shall admit any further rotten boroughs into this Congress to participate in legislation. But the objection is raised against this measure that we shall thereby establish a precedent. If my colleague from Illinois and my friend from Michigan think that Illinois did not have sufficient population when it was admitted into the Union, that objection should have been made at that time, not now.

What do you want to do? You want to give the 40,000 people in Montana the right to have equal power of representation in the Senate with nearly four million of people that live in Illinois. I say it is rank injustice.

Do you want to give the 40,000 people in Montana a Representative having the same political power on this floor that I possess as a Representative of 153,000 people?

Mr. HORR. Who proposes that?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY] has twice the political power on this floor of any Representative from any other State in this Union in proportion to the population he represents.

Mr. CASSIDY. That may be because of the standing of the Representative perhaps. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the purposes of this bill is to serve notice on these Territories that they shall not have representation on this floor until they have a population large enough to give them an equal right to representation in this House.

Mr. LONG. Does it serve notice on them?

Mr. HERBERT rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I decline to yield. The gentleman from Washington has planted himself in opposition to this bill on the ground that it takes away from the people living in the Territories the right of representation in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, and he seemed to think it was a crime against their political rights that they should be disfranchised and deprived of the right of representation on this floor. Why, sir, the same argument exactly would apply to the seven or eight hundred white people that now live in Alaska. On the principle that he seems to desire to establish Alaska would have an inherent right to representation on this floor. Sir, there ought to be some limit. There ought to be some rule established upon this question.

I regard it as one of the worst features of this Government that there is a body enjoying equal power with us in legislation where there is a great inequality of representation and power. Look at the States of New York, Illinois, and Ohio, and compare their power there with Delaware or Nevada. We do not have it in our power to interfere with the political rights of Delaware. She was one of the original sovereign States. She was at that time an equal in sovereignty with any other State in this Union. We can not now deprive Nevada of her Statehood and of her rights under the Constitution to representation. But I want it said to Montana, I want it said to Washington Territory, and to all these other Territories that may seek to be admitted as full sisters into the Union, that we do not propose to allow any more such small representations in the Senate and House of Representatives.

Why, sir, nearly every Territory is knocking at our doors now for admission. Dakota wants to divide herself into two States, so that instead of being represented as one State in the Senate it may have double representation there. Then here is Washington Territory. According to the census of 1880 that Territory had 75,000 population. The gentleman from Washington Territory now insists and demands that Washington Territory shall be admitted into the Union, and claims that they have now a sufficient population to entitle it to admission.

Mr. BRENTS. I say that Territory has a population of from 150,000 to 175,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I know that in 1866, when Colorado was seeking admission into the Union, one of the Senators declared that if Colorado did not already have a population equal to the ratio of representation in the House, it would have it by the time it came into the Union. Afterward, when the question came up for final consideration, it was found that Colorado had not more than one-third of the number necessary and that her population instead of increasing had decreased. That was in 1866. The discovery of gold at new points increased her population before she was admitted in 1876.

I do not wish to discuss this question further. I have sought by this bill simply to do justice to the old States as well as justice to these Territories. All I desire is that the people of the States shall enjoy equal representative power in both Houses of Congress with the people congregrated in the Western Territories. I do not deny them any right that is enjoyed by the districts in the older States. I simply say to them, "You must wait until you have reached your majority before you enter into the full possession of your inheritance." The right to representation ought to begin when they have a population equal to that of a Congressional district in one of the older States. Now I move the previous question.

Mr. CASSIDY. You propose to reverse the policy of the Democratic party for a hundred years.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does not a motion for the previous question take precedence of a motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX, of New York). The motion to lay on the table has priority.

The question being taken on the motion to lay the bill on the table, the Speaker pro tempore stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 15.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was laid on the table.

LEGISLATURE OF DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 4359) in relation to the Legislature of Dakota Territory.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills reported by the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I ask for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4359.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4359) in relation to the Legislature of Dakota Territory.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota shall hereafter consist of twenty-four members of the council and forty-eight members of the house of representatives, and that there shall be elected at the next general election in said Territory two members of the council and four members of the house of representatives in each of the twelve legislative districts provided for in chapter 7 of the Territorial statutes of 1883 of said Territory.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CARLETON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4359) in relation to the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota, respectfully submit the following report:

By act of Congress approved June 19, 1878, the Legislatures of the respective Territories are limited to twelve members of the council and twenty-four members of the house of representatives, and the number of council districts to twelve, and the representative districts to twenty-four. By the statutes of Dakota, 1883, chapter 7, the Territory of Dakota is apportioned into twelve legislative districts, and provision is made for the election of one councilman and two members from each of said districts. The sessions of Territorial Legislatures are limited to — days, and the pay of members to $4 per day and 20 cents per mile for travel. The Territory of Dakota paid last year into the Treasury $21,175 excess of revenue, over and above all expenditures, for postal service in that Territory, and on account of internal revenue, $86,875.

The bill now under consideration provides for increasing the number of members of council from twelve to twenty-four, and the number of members of the house from twenty-four to forty-eight, and the election of two councilmen and four members, instead of one councilman and two members as heretofore, from each of the twelve districts provided for by the statutes of the Territory, thus leaving the division of the Territory into legislative districts and apportionment of members as now provided by the statutes of the Territory. The increased expense to the Government will be the pay of thirty-six members for — days and mileage once in every two years.

The Territory of Dakota has an area of 149,100 square miles, a population of upward of 350,000 persons, exclusive of Indians, with an assessed valuation of $80,000,000, 2,475 miles of railroads in operation, and is being rapidly settled and developed in all of its different sections.

Your committee are therefore of the opinion that the Legislatures as now provided by law for this vast Territory, with its increasing population and varied interests, is too small and should be increased to the extent provided for in this bill, and report the same back and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I was not a member of the subcommittee on Territories to which this bill was referred, nor did I make the report which has just been read. I have been requested, however, to present some facts by way of explanation of the bill now under consideration.

As the House is very well aware, Dakota is a very large Territory, nearly four hundred miles square. It has at this time a very large population, as has already been stated in some remarks made a few moments ago. The Territory of Dakota was first organized in March, 1861, and included at that time what is now embraced in the Territories of Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. When the Territory of Dakota was first organized, embracing all these several Territories I have named, it had a population of less than 5,000. The three Territories which I have just named have been created by more recent acts of Congress, leaving as the present western boundary of Dakota the twenty-seventh meridian of longitude west of Washington.

When the present Territory was organized the Legislature consisted of nine members of the council, which could be increased to thirteen members, and thirteen members of the lower house, which could be increased to twenty-six. By an act of Congress approved June 19, 1878, the Legislature of each of the Territories was limited to twelve councilmen and twenty-four members of the house. That is a general law embracing all the Territories of the United States, and of course is applicable to the Territory of Dakota. The same act restricted the number of council districts to twelve and the number of legislative districts to twenty-four.

The census of 1870 showed that Dakota had a population of 14,000. In 1878 the population of that Territory did not exceed 80,000. The census of 1880 showed that the population had increased to 135,100. And by a careful estimate, which has been prepared by taking the number of pre-emption and homestead entries as a basis, it has been found that in 1883 the population of Dakota had increased to more than 350,000. And it is confidently believed by the people of that Territory, and all those who have given this subject any considerable consideration, that by January, 1885, there will be not less than 500,000 people living "permanently" in the Territory of Dakota, to use the very language of the bill which so lately was disposed of by the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman speaks of an estimate made from the number of homestead and pre-emption entries. Where was that estimate made, and by whom?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The estimate to which the gentleman refers was made by a committee of the citizens of Dakota who came here and presented the statement to the Committee on Territories of the Senate having under consideration the admission of the south half of the Territory as a State. I presume there can be no question that the population of the Territory of Dakota is rapidly approaching a half a million of people.

All the persons whom I have met from Dakota, and I have met quite a number, and those who have lectured upon Dakota (and we have had some lectures of that kind in Washington this winter), say that the population of Dakota is now almost if not quite half a million of people. Dakota has now a greater population than either of the nine States of Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, Oregon, Rhode Island, and Vermont had according to the census of 1880. We can not very well estimate the population of this Territory at a later day without resorting to some such statistics as those to which I have referred.

Dakota has a larger population now than the three States of Delaware, Nevada, and Oregon combined, together with all the four smaller Territories, had in 1880, as shown by the census of that year. The percentage of increase in the population of Dakota from 1870 to 1880—and I wish to call particular attention to this fact—was 853.2 per cent. At the same rate of increase, laying aside these other estimates, disregarding all the statements of the citizens of Dakota to which I have referred, this Territory will show a population in 1885 of 570,000. It seems to me that this way of making an estimate can not be questioned. If any difference, the ratio of increase will be greater.

I said a moment ago that Dakota was a very large Territory. Its area is 149,100 square miles, and it contains nearly 100,000,000 of acres of land. Of that amount 85 per cent., or 85,000,000 of acres, are arable lands, i. e., land susceptible of the highest cultivation, fitted for the raising of the cereals usual to that latitude. Ten per cent. of the amount, or 10,000,000 of acres, are better calculated for pasturage than for cultivation, being broken by hills and ravines. The remaining 5 per cent., or 5,000,000 of acres, is timber land, and includes lakes and rivers.

The area of the State of Ohio is only 40,760 square miles. The area of the great State of New York is only 47,620 square miles. The area of Illinois is 56,000 square miles; of Iowa, 55,000 square miles; of Pennsylvania, 44,985 square miles; of Vermont, 9,135 square miles; of New Jersey, 7,445 square miles, and of Delaware, 1,960 square miles. This territory, almost four times as large as the largest State in this Union, except Texas, California, and one or two other of the larger Western States, contains, as I have already said, 149,100 square miles of area.

The Territory of Dakota has now an assessed valuation of $80,000,000. This is the statement from the reports, which can not be questioned. It has now in actual operation 2,475 miles of railroad, which, as I am informed by very good authority, will be increased during 1884 to 3,000 miles.

Besides this, Dakota, though a comparatively new Territory, where you might think a bank could scarcely be sustained, as capital is sometimes very slow to go into these newer portions of the country, has a large amount of banking capital. Dakota paid in 1883 a larger amount of internal-revenue taxation to the Government on banking capital than did either of the States of Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Maine, Nevada, New Hampshire, Vermont, or South Carolina. I have here the figures to sustain this statement. The tax on banking capital paid by this Territory during the same year was more than that paid by the States of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont combined. During the same period this Territory paid in internal-revenue taxes, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I hold in my hand, $86,874.25. No doubt many members of the Committee of the Whole will be surprised that this Territory paid so large a sum. I wish to call attention to the further fact that Dakota has now more than nine hundred post-offices, and during the last fiscal year paid into the Treasury as postal revenue, over and above all expenditures for the postal service, $21,175. I hold in my hand the recent report of the Postmaster-General for the year 1883, showing the receipts during that year from the postal service in the Territory of Dakota to have been $313,169.35, while the entire expenditures of the postal service in that Territory were $291,993.94. Thus the net profits from the postal service in that Territory for the last fiscal year were, as I have stated, $21,175. Very few of the States, and certainly no other Territory, can make such an exhibit. Of course I take into consideration the newness of this Territory and the disadvantages to which any new Territory is subjected. These statements are surprising, and yet they can not be doubted.

That is not all. While speaking of the resources of this Territory I wish to call attention to another fact. The land offices in the Territory of Dakota paid into the Treasury of the United States last year, as surplus fees and commissions, in excess of all expenses, more than $400,000. This was the excess over and above all the expenses of the Government and Government officers in the conduct of those offices, inclusive of land surveys, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883.

I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, from which I have gathered these facts. I wish gentlemen to understand that I am referring to the net profits, not the proceeds arising from the sales of lands. That is an entirely distinct matter. The figures I have stated are the net profits arising from commissions and fees after deducting all expenses.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. What is the amount?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The exact amount is $464,869.93. This is the net profit arising from the commissions and fees received at the different land offices in that Territory over and above the salaries of the officers of the Government and all expenses incident to the management of their offices except the surveys. The public surveys cost $60,000, leaving, as I before said, a net revenue to the Government of over $400,000, or to be exact, $464,869.93, after deducting cost of surveys.

The statement I here submit, taken from the report of the General Land Office, shows the following net sums paid into the Treasury by the several land offices of Dakota, with the aggregate:

Aberdeen	$31,991 32
Bismarck	34,617 25
Deadwood	1,095 49
Fargo	61,916 27
Grand Forks	33,523 25
Mitchell	87,240 97
Huron	100,432 11
Watertown	82,618 40
Yankton	31,434 87
Total	464,869 93

The money arising from the sale of public lands is another matter. The amount received from the sales of public lands are away beyond these figures. I have here a statement, taken also from the report of the General Land Office, of the amounts received at the different land offices, showing the aggregate to be upward of $3,650,000.

In 1883 the Legislature of Dakota apportioned the Territory into twelve legislative districts, and provided for electing from each district one councilman and two members of the house. The bill now under consideration proposes simply to double the number of the members of the Legislature. Under this bill a district which has heretofore elected one councilman will elect two; a district which heretofore elected two members of the house will hereafter elect four. The bill does not propose to change the districts or interfere with them in any way. The districts in which members of the council are elected are identical in boundaries with those in which members of the house are elected. We do not propose to change these districts in this bill, but only to double the number of legislators in that Territory. This bill preserves the apportionment of districts as made by the Territorial Legislature.

Mr. Chairman, I have stated the revenues received by the Government from that Territory, the amounts received from internal-revenue taxation, from the postal service, from fees of land officers, as well as from sales of the public lands, and have given some idea of the extent and growth of the business of the Territory. Now, what this Territory asks in this bill is a very small thing. Under the bill now under consideration there will be thirty-six additional members of the Legislature, at $4 per day for sixty days, which is the limit of the legislative session. The addition to the expenses of the Territory will be only about $9,000 in every two years—about $4,500 a year—almost nothing compared with the great profit which this Government is every year receiving from this Territory. After taking out the expenses of the judiciary, after deducting the expenses of the court and all the officers of the court, after deducting the expenses of the Territory of every kind which have been incurred and which the General Government has heretofore paid, there is an annual profit of fully $350,000.

You can see this by examining the reports. This Territory only asks as against that $350,000 that the General Government shall increase the expense about $9,000.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, and I am authorized to say on behalf of Dakota that if it is at all embarrassing to this General Government, if this great Government of ours, with its overflowing Treasury—where is my friend from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD], for I can not speak of an overflowing Treasury without thinking of him [laughter]—if it is any embarrassment to the General Government to pay this additional $9,000, the people of Dakota will be content to pay it themselves. They would not hesitate a single moment in regard to the matter. It is not a question of expense. They come here and ask for the passage of this bill for another reason. They ask it because the Territory is so large, its resources are so great, this change in the present law is a necessity. Its population has increased to such an extent, its business has grown so rapidly, its railroads are being built so fast that the inhabitants of this Territory believe that twelve men in the council of that Territory is too small a number in connection with twenty-four members in the other house to fairly and honestly do the business which must necessarily come before such a Legislature.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it must be apparent to every gentleman who will consider the question for a single moment that it should not be in the power of seven men, as it is now under the present law of the Territory of Dakota, by combining together to control all legislation. These seven men hold in their grasp 500,000 people. They hold under their control all that immense Territory. They regulate the erection of public buildings. From them emanates all the legislation for that great Territory, covering an area of nearly four hundred miles square, and having nearly a hundred million acres of land, 85 per cent. of which is tillable, ready for agriculture, and soon to be occupied by the emigrants, who are rapidly making their homes in this Territory. If the increase of the past be any indication of the future, these lands will soon all be taken up by a busy and prosperous population.

I insist, therefore, that these people are not asking too much. I do not think I ought to occupy the time of this committee a single moment longer. I presume there is no reasonable expectation of Dakota being admitted as a State during the present Congress. I do not propose to discuss that question or to state the reasons why I come to that conclusion; but whether it is admitted or not I see no possible objection to allowing this vast Territory, with all the great interests growing up there, to have a larger representation in the two houses of her Legislative Assembly.

You know, Mr. Chairman, there are times in new Territories, as well as in old States, when great questions concerning railroads, great questions concerning corporations, questions concerning the location of the capital, concerning legislation of every kind affecting the interests of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people—I say there are times when these important matters press for full and efficient action; and it seems to me to be unjust to leave Dakota with a Legislative Assembly so few in number as it is at present. There was no question in the minds of the Committee on Territories, and I think there should be none in the minds of this committee, as to the propriety and necessity for this law.

I will occupy the time of the committee no longer, but will conclude, trusting we will have favorable action on the bill. I trust this committee will not deny this request. It is not the policy of this Government to place so much power in the hands of so few persons. We should not leave the rights and liberties of so many people, the control and management of so much property, in the hands of such a small Legislature. We should remove temptation as far as possible from all men, and make bribery as difficult as possible. In such a small body there may be times when it would be a great object to men of large means or to corporations of large interests to control the Legislature. At present a few men only would have to be reached. It would be more difficult to reach a larger number. In the interest of this people let us pass this bill.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. After the forcible statement made by my friend from Ohio, if there is no further discussion desired, and I hope there will be none, I ask that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina or the gentleman from Ohio a question. The bill, as I understand it, does not provide for any subdivision of the counties growing out of the additional representation. I presume the practice is for the Territories to regulate that for themselves?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; and this does not change the districts at all. They were provided by act of the Legislature passed in 1883, and it is proposed here to let them remain just as they were under that arrangement.

Mr. BLOUNT. But I mean it is perfectly competent, if the Territory desires to make another division, to do so?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. And that is confirmed by the practice of the Territories?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I renew the motion that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4359) in relation to the Legislature of Dakota Territory, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I ask the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Wright.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I now ask to call up the bill (H. R. 5639) extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Wyoming Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That justices of the peace in the Territory of Wyoming shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy where the debt or sum claimed exceeds $300.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this enactment be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I ask for the reading of the report, as I think that will convey all the information necessary upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. M. E. POST) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5639) extending jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Wyoming Territory, respectfully report:

That the effect of this bill is to increase the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the Territory of Wyoming to any matter in controversy where the debt or sum claimed does not exceed $300. The jurisdiction is now limited in any matter as aforesaid to $100.

The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming have submitted the following memorial to Congress, praying that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace be extended:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming, respectfully represent, that by organic act of the Territory the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil matters is limited to the sum of $100, and that larger sums are matters for adjudication in the district court.

"That each district court in the Territory holds but two terms a year, and that Congress has hitherto in other Territories found it expedient to extend the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to $300 even when the district terms have been more frequent.

"That the Territory of Wyoming is very large in extent, its population is rapidly increasing, and the business of its district courts is also greatly increasing, so much so that it frequently happens in some counties that all the business before the courts can not be disposed of within the time limited by law for its session; and your memorialists say that justice frequently fails in consequence of the greater expense of having to litigate all matters involving a greater sum than $100 in the district courts, chiefly on account of the extensive area of the several counties, which makes the expense of obtaining witnesses sometimes greater than the amount involved.

"Your memorialists would therefore pray that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace be extended by an act of Congress to $300 in civil matters."

Your committee, therefore, report said bill back to the House and recommend its passage.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the reasons assigned for the passage of this bill are so clearly demonstrated in the report which has just been read that I think there will be no objection to its passage. It is a matter solely concerning people who ask for the passage of the bill. I therefore move the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I now ask to call up House bill 6409 to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all those certain acts passed by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington at its ninth biennial session, commencing Monday, October 1, 1883, and ending November 29, 1883, namely:

An act to correct errors and supply defects in the code of Washington;

An act amending chapter 193 of the code, relative to the construction and maintenance of dikes and ditches;

An act to prohibit the sale of toy pistols, fire-arms, and tobacco to children under the age of 16 years;

An act in relation to prosecuting attorneys, defining their duties and fixing their compensation;

An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriation for the hospital for the insane for the fiscal years 1882 and 1883;

An act to provide for holding a term of the district court at Port Townsend;

An act to incorporate the city of Whatcom;

An act to enable the county commissioners of Yakima County to build certain bridges in Yakima County;

An act to legalize certain ordinances and proceedings of the city of Seattle in condemning a strip of land for a public street;

An act to provide for the payment of bills for printing blank commissions for general officers, commissioners of deeds, and notaries public, for use of the executive department;

An act to establish the county seat of Garfield County at Pomeroy;

Notwithstanding the omission of the enacting clause or the date of the governor's approval, the misdating of such approval, or other defect or other irregularity, are hereby validated and confirmed as of November 28, 1883, when they are supposed to have been approved.

SEC. 2. That the words "subdivision twelve of" be inserted in the act of said Legislative Assembly entitled "An act to amend section 347 of the code of Washington," approved November 23, 1883, immediately after the word "that" where it first occurs in said act and immediately before the word "section" therein, and that construction and effect be given to said act as though it contained said words.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask now for the reading of the report as the only statement I think will be necessary, and at the proper time I shall move a single amendment to the first section of the bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred House bill 2944, having considered the same, submit the following report, recommending a substitute for said bill and the passage thereof:

Through some inadvertence, or clerical omission, several of the acts passed at the last session of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory are so defective as to raise serious questions of their validity, and in one instance a very different effect is given from what was evidently intended. In some cases the governor's approval antedates the passage of the act, while in others it is entirely omitted. The governor states that the acts were actually approved and signed by him on November 28, 1883, and were intended to have been so dated. Your committee are satisfied that such is the fact, but, in any event, the defect should be cured.

In the act to correct errors and supply defects in the code the courts have held that several different subjects have been embraced. This, being in contravention of the Territorial organic act, renders the whole act void. It contains some very necessary and important legislation, and nothing vicious or improper. This purely technical inhibition, although it may subserve a salutary purpose in some cases, should not, therefore, we think, be suffered to operate in this instance.

In the act to establish the county seat of Garfield the enacting clause was unintentionally omitted from the engrossed copy. By oversight it was signed and approved without detection of the mistake. The act is much needed and should be made valid.

By the like accidental omission of three words from the act to amend section 347 of the code, nearly the whole law of exemptions was, contrary to the intention and understanding of the Legislature and the governor, as we are fully assured, entirely swept away. To allow it to so stand would cause much litigation and produce great hardships.

Other defective acts have been called to our attention, but after examination their validation is considered inexpedient.

The early passage of the accompanying substitute is of pressing importance, and your committee so recommend.

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make no further statement in regard to the general matters treated of by this bill. It is a matter of considerable interest to the people of the Territory. These defects are almost all clearly clerical, and no legislation has been put into this bill except the validation of one act to which there is any objection, and that is the act to incorporate the city of Whatcom, which is named in the twenty-second line of the first section of the bill. I therefore move to strike that out of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 22, "An act to incorporate the city of Whatcom."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a resolution providing for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1883, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of a bill (H. R. 2228) to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American carrying trade with amendments. It further announced that the Senate requested a conference with the House on said bill and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. FRYE, Mr. MILLER, of New York, and Mr. VEST.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NICHOLLS. If the Committee on Territories has no more business to submit to the House, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I beg leave to say that the Committee on Territories have no further business to which they desire the attention of the House to-day.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to—there being ayes 59, noes 33.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn the Chair will lay before the House certain personal requests and executive communications.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HEWITT, of New York, until next Tuesday.

To Mr. BURLEIGH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. TULLY, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SNYDER, for six days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BREWER, of New York, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. CHACE, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. TUCKER, for two days.

ORDER TO PRINT.

On motion of Mr. DUNHAM, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the bill (H. R. 3967) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle, and to provide means for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals, be printed, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

On motion of Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was authorized to have printed certain arguments made before said committee, together with such documents as it may deem proper.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HALSELL, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw the papers accompanying the bill (H. R. 667) for the benefit of George D. Blakey, they being only copies of the originals.

On motion of Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of U. S. Stockton without leaving certified copies, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOSPITAL AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Surgeon-General of the Army in relation to the new Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., together with estimates of appropriations required for its opening and maintenance; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CERTIFIED CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental list of claims certified under provisions of section 273 of the Revised Statutes by the accounting officers of the Treasury to the Secretary of the Navy, received subsequent to June 13, 1883, aggregating $3,355.35; also a list of deficiences presented by the Secretary of the Navy amounting to $1,961.58; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Memorial of W. R. Power and others, of Cobb County, Georgia, for aid to education—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. CONNOLLY: Petition of J. G. Stephens Post, No. 304, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, in favor of the passage of a law granting a pension of $8 per month to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war—to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. EATON: Memorial of Julius Converse and others, Stafford Springs, Conn., relative to the postal telegraph bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads

By Mr. ELLIS: Memorial of Edward B. Wheelock, relative to the forfeiture of the land grant of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, &c.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GEDDES: Petition of Louis D. Strutton and 60 others, citizens of Huron County, Ohio, for the restoration of the Nez Percé Indians to their friends in Idaho—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HANBACK: Petition of Ellsworth Post, No. 22, Grand Army of the Republic, relative to pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. H. H. HATCH: Petition of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Reunion Association of Southwestern Michigan, relative to a soldiers' home in Michigan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLARD: Petition of citizens of Tioga County, New York, for a pension to Henry Mericle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OCHILTREE: Papers relating to the claim of the heir of William Hendley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROSECRANS: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, in support of a Territorial organization for Alaska—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. T. G. SKINNER: Papers relating to the claim of O. F. Adams—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 14, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of March 1, 1884, reports from the Chief of Engineers and Col. William E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, with accompanying map, concerning the dam and Government works in the Ohio River, near Jeffersonville, Ind., their effect upon the flood line in times of freshets, and the practicability and probable cost of constructing a levee to prevent the overflow of that city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter with the accompanying reports, excepting the map, will be printed, and the letter with all the papers will be referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Chair omits ordering the printing of the map until the committee shall see whether it will be necessary.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is right; it may not be necessary.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4359) in relation to the Legislature of Dakota Territory was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to ask consent of the Senate in relation to a matter of pending business. The Utah bill is the unfinished business and will be reached to-day at 2 o'clock in regular order. One Senator who is very much interested in that bill, in opposition to the measure, who has some amendments which he desires to present and discuss, informs me that he is obliged to be absent to-day and to-morrow. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Utah bill may stand till Monday to be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock on Monday as it would otherwise be to-day. I suppose the Senate can proceed with the Calendar to-day, or with such other business as it shall see fit, without inconvenience or loss of time.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to say, before such unanimous consent is granted, that I wish to substitute for the Utah bill for consideration at 2 o'clock the bill establishing a bureau of labor statistics, which can easily be disposed of during the day; and the convenience of one or more Senators who are obliged to be absent after to-day will be greatly promoted thereby, because they desire to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business of the day, being Senate bill 1283, the Utah bill as it is called, be postponed until Monday next at 2 o'clock, to be treated as the unfinished business at that time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics be taken up at 2 o'clock to-day, there being no unfinished business. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BLAIR. I will then, on the conclusion of the morning business, move to take up the bill, or if there is objection made and if there is a probability that the Senator from Wisconsin will be satisfied that the bill shall be substituted for the unfinished business at 2 o'clock, I will not object to proceeding during the remainder of the morning hour with the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5639) extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Wyoming Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 6409) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of Chamberlain Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, Saint Johnsbury, Vt., praying for the adoption of the recommendations of the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a memorial of a large number of residents of Cincinnati, Ohio, respectfully remonstrating "against the enactment of any measure relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials, or establish a governmental monopoly of the telegraph business, or which shall employ the functions of Government to destroy the property of individuals who have embarked in legitimate enterprise to provide ample facilities for the public accommodation." The memorial is signed by two hundred and twenty or two hundred and thirty of the most influential and active business men and firms in the city of Cincinnati, and their request, by reason of their character, deserves a respectful consideration. I move that the memorial lie on the table, as the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported a bill on the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions adopted by Eagle Post, No. 52, Grand Army of the Republic, Eau Claire, Wis., in favor of the passage of certain pension bills now before Congress; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of John R. Harrington, praying for an extension of his patent for making carpet-lining; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of Ben Franklin Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, praying for pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. I present resolutions of the American Medical Association passed at the recent meeting of that association in this city upon the subject of the investigation of the causes of contagious diseases, and the prevention of their introduction and spread. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARLEY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California:

Assembly concurrent resolution, No. 9, relative to the location of the eastern boundary line of the State of California.

Whereas that portion of the eastern boundary line of the State of California which lies south of the thirty-ninth degree of north latitute, and which runs in a straight line, in a southeasterly direction, to the Colorado River, at a point where it intersects the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude, is improperly located, and the monuments therefor are in some places more than a mile from the true boundary line; and

Whereas said monuments do not indicate a straight line, but a broken one, such as is not responsive to the description of the true boundary; and

Whereas the true boundary line is not marked by monuments, and great inconvenience arises to those settlers who live on the territory between the true line and the line marked by monuments as aforesaid, on account of uncertainty as to what State they reside in, to what State their taxes are due, the true description of the land whereon they are settled, and various other matters: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives requested to procure such action by the Congress of the United States as will secure the services of a corps of able engineers of the United States to locate said true boundary line, and to fix suitable monuments thereon.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of the foregoing resolution.

H. M. LA RUE,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN DAGGETT,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

THOS. L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. That subject-matter has already been referred to the Committee on Territories, and they are examining it.

Mr. FARLEY. I have no choice as to the reference, but the proposition struck me as one properly belonging to the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the same subject is already under consideration by another committee, the Chair suggests that the resolution had better be referred to that committee.

Mr. FARLEY. Very well; let it have that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. FARLEY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California; which was read:

Assembly concurrent resolution, No. 12, relative to the removal of causes pending in the courts of the State of California to the Federal courts of the United States.

Whereas the character and class of cases which may be removed from a State court to an inferior Federal court for trial therein is prescribed by the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, now in force; and

Whereas by the provisions of said act it is now become competent for a citizen of this State, or a corporation organized under the laws of this State, when sued by the State for the recovery of taxes due, to remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for trial; and

Whereas such removal is productive of delay, and is derogatory to the authority of the State and injurious to the public interests involved: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That our Senators be, and they are hereby, instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to procure an amendment to said act of March 3, 1875, excepting from its operation all suits brought in the courts of any State to enforce the collection of the revenue of such State, or of any county thereof, and leaving all Federal questions involved or claimed to be involved in any such suit to be examined in the Supreme Court of the United States and determined upon a writ of error, as was the settled practice for the first seventy years of our national existence.

H. M. LA RUE,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN DAGGETT,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

THOMAS L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FARLEY. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I request the committee to report such an amendment of the law on the subject as they may deem proper.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of the Board of Horticulture of California, praying that Congress amend the customs-revenue laws so as to require every article imported, whether dutiable or free, intended for human consumption, to be accompanied by a table of its contents, subject to confiscation for default; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Thomas B. Dibbler and 14 other citizens of Santa Barbara, Cal., praying for the repeal of laws limiting the term of certain administrative offices to four years; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of citizens of Clifton Springs, N. Y.; a memorial of citizens of Delhi, N. Y.; and a memorial of citizens of Bath, N. Y., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental telegraph; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of members of the Stationers' Board of Trade, New York, in favor of a reduction of postage to 1 cent for each letter not exceeding one-half ounce in weight; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 391) for the relief of Wetmore & Brother, of Saint Louis, Mo., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 389) for the relief of A. L. H. Crenshaw, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1073) for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox and others, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2209) for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox and others; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2145) to extend an act approved August 8, 1882, to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1367) granting a pension to Sarah L. Wetter, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

MISS MARY P. MACBLAIR.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2677) granting a pension to Miss Mary P. MacBlair, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary P. MacBlair, daughter of Thomas Parkin MacBlair, late a purser in the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee report an amendment to the bill, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions is, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

And pay her a pension at the rate of $15 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Who made it?

Mr. CAMDEN. I made the report. The facts are simply these: This lady is the daughter of a naval officer. There were three children, and they received a pension of $30 a month, $10 each, during their infancy. One of them is now dead, and the other daughter is in an insane asylum, and this lady is almost blind, and has spinal affection. She is in an infirmary now in Philadelphia. The House passed the bill giving her a pension of $30 a month. The Senate committee reports an amendment making it $15 a month.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to hear an explanation of why the reduction was made. I am strongly inclined to support the bill as it passed the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. The bill is not yet before the Senate. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK. I do not know much about these things, and do not very often object to the action of a committee, but I remember very well that when Governor Knott, of Kentucky, was here he lived in the family and was very intimate with them, and in that way I came to know them. This lady came to me appealing earnestly for aid. She was taken to a charitable institution in Philadelphia, and they have kept her longer than they usually allow persons to remain. Unless something is done for her relief she will be turned out upon the world almost blind and a totally helpless woman. I do hope that we shall give her $30 a month. I rarely meddle with such matters, but it is a case of great hardship.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would simply observe that in my opinion, if this lady is entitled to a pension at all, if she is pensionable and has such a claim, the reduction made by the amendment proposed is far too great. I have some knowledge of this party and of the condition that she is in, and I shall vote most cheerfully for the bill, but I shall not vote to reduce one-half the pension granted by the House. I shall not vote for the amendment. It is not right in my judgment.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted this day by Mr. CAMDEN:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2677) granting a pension to Mary P. MacBlair, have carefully considered the same and the papers therewith submitted, and report:

Your committee adopt the report of the House committee in this case as containing a substantial statement of the facts, which report is as follows:

"Mr. G. W. HEWITT, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 2677:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2677) granting a pension to Mary P. MacBlair, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

"Miss Mary P. MacBlair is the daughter of the late Thomas P. MacBlair, who served in the Navy as purser from November 11, 1839, to his death, February 17, 1857. He died on board the Merrimac, after more than seventeen years of arduous and gallant service. Three children survived him, his wife having died one year previous to his death. His children were granted a pension, by special act, at the rate of $30 a month, from the father's death till May 12, 1870, when the youngest had reached the age of 16 years. Purser MacBlair died poor, leaving his children nothing save a good name. One of the children is now dead. Of the two surviving, Alice is insane and is confined in an asylum; the other, Mary P., who seeks relief at the hands of Congress, made her own living until her health gave way under hard work, and her eyes began to fail.

"Added to her blindness is serious spinal disease, and she is wholly incapable of earning a living. She has no home and no relatives able to aid her. At present she is in a charitable institution in Philadelphia, but will not be permitted to remain there longer than two or three months. Being as helpless now as when her father died, she needs the protecting care of the Government which that father so gallantly served, and your committee think her claims for a pension as strong now as they were when she was an infant. The general pension laws now give pensions to children of tender years because it is presumed that they are unable to support themselves until they are 16 years of age. But if from sickness or any physical or mental cause a soldier's child is unable to earn a living, the spirit of the law would require that the pension be continued."

Your committee, under the exceptional circumstances of this case, report the bill favorably with the following amendment: In line 8, after the words "at the rate of," strike out "$30" and insert "$15;" and recommend the passage of the bill amended as stated.

Mr. LAPHAM. I know something of this case. When this lady was in the Interior Department the present governor of Kentucky, Governor Knott, and myself went to the Secretary for the purpose of obtaining for her a sick leave, with her pay to continue, with a view of enabling her, if possible, to restore her health. After much effort with that very careful Secretary of the Interior we succeeded in obtaining the leave, but it proved entirely fruitless, and she was compelled to abandon her position. She has been an invalid from that time to the present.

I have a long letter from Governor Knott upon the subject, received a short time since, urging me to use my efforts to secure the passage of this bill for her relief. I hope it will pass, and I hope the amendment proposed by the committee of the Senate will be rejected and that the bill will be passed as it came from the House. I make an appeal to Senators to reject the amendment and pass the bill as we received it from the House.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will state that personally I am not inclined to insist on the amendment of the committee. I reported the bill with the amendment, it being the sense of the committee that it was a very deserving case and that she ought to receive some aid from the Government. The committee thought that as under the law she would only be entitled to $10 as an infant, they would place the amount at $15. It is certainly a very urgent case and appeals warmly to the sympathy of Congress. I leave the matter to the discretion of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if the committee was satisfied that $15 would support the pensioner.

Mr. CAMDEN. No, they were satisfied that it would not, but it would do something toward her support.

Mr. HARRIS. Do the facts show that she is wholly dependent and that this is her only source of support?

Mr. CAMDEN. At present it is so. She is in an infirmary in Philadelphia for the purpose of having her eyes treated, and in addition to that has spinal affection. It is clear that she is unable to do anything to support herself.

Mr. HARRIS. It being a pensionable case, as she is wholly dependent upon her pension for her support, upon what ground can we justify giving an amount less than can support her, is the question in my mind.

Mr. CAMDEN. It is a question whether the Government is under obligation to entirely support her, but it may give a certain amount to aid in that direction. The committee did not consider that there was any obligation on the part of the Government to render entire support. While representing the committee in the report, I will say that personally I have no argument to make against the adoption of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. BECK. I know from her statement to me that her case is a very desperate one.

Mr. CAMDEN. It certainly appeals very warmly to our sympathies.

Mr. BECK. She is blind and utterly helpless, and if we are going to do anything at all we should give the amount proposed by the House. The Senator from West Virginia himself says the pension proposed by the committee will not support her.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is it not true, I will ask the Senator from West Virginia, that when she goes from the infirmary, the charitable institution, she has nothing to fall back on except what we provide for her?

Mr. CAMDEN. I suppose that to be true.

Mr. BECK. And she has overstaid her time at the infirmary.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will state also that this young lady for several years occupied a position in one of the Departments here which a year or more ago she was compelled to give up in consequence of her ill health and inability to do anything. Since that time she has been helpless.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to make a remark in reference to this case, inasmuch as the amendment, I may perhaps without impropriety say, is before the Senate upon my own motion in the committee. It may be known to some Senators that I have in former sessions of Congress urged pensions in cases like this, never except against the opposition of a divided committee and strong opposition in the Senate itself. I feel under the necessity of saying in reference to this matter that the motion to reduce the amount provided for this lady in the bill by the House was made by me because it seemed an important thing to do in order to secure the report of anything whatever. I did not understand that the Senator in charge of the bill was strenuously in favor of the bill as it came from the House, and fearing its loss I moved that the lady be pensioned at one-half the amount provided by the House.

There are two children, one of them entirely helpless and supported now by a public charity, but not that of the country. This lady is able to be about, but is nevertheless in need of help. It seemed to me that as there might be some doubt of the Senate indorsing the payment of pensions in cases like this, if we could secure for her the same pension which is given to the widow of a second lieutenant of the Army, perhaps it would be treating her under all the circumstances with justice. There is no reason why the other sister should not call upon the Government for assistance in the same way. I think it ought to be rendered.

I hold to a principle which is not generally indorsed here, but I believe it is a principle which the nation will indorse, and I propose to ask the Senate and Congress and the country to indorse the principle not far hence, when we come to discuss the Mexican soldiers' bill with reference to the views he proposes to advocate, of which the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] gave us notice yesterday. I indorse the principle that wherever a soldier or the dependent relative of a soldier or the widow of a soldier is in need of actual assistance from any source whatever, the country owes to that soldier and to that dependent relative the necessary pecuniary assistance, and it is an honorable sort of assistance, not to be stigmatized as that which goes to paupers whose poverty may be the result of that which is a source of disgrace.

This woman I think should be maintained at the Government expense. She is a minor to all intents and purposes. Although her age must be 30 or more, she is practically as incapable of support as when she was 5 or when she was 1 year of age. I think that we owe to her that amount which is necessary to give her a comfortable support.

It seemed to me, under the circumstances, considering the uncertainty of getting anything for her, that $15 a month was perhaps as much as we could expect to obtain, and particularly if we exercise that same sort of honorable charity (if others choose to call it charity, I think it a just due) toward all who may have an equal claim.

For my own part I am very glad to see this inclination to reject the amendment. I think it will be of assistance when we come to consider other cases which have been rejected in former Congresses which will be reported to this, and in all the great future of the dealing of the nation with its wards, with those to whom it owes its present existence and its hopes of future prosperity, I trust we shall be admonished by the generosity which the Senate is inclined to exercise in this particular case.

Mr. WILSON. I could not hear, owing to the confusion in the Chamber, the reading of the report as distinctly as I should have liked, and I do not now understand whether the father of this lady was a pensioner. I should like to know whether that was the case, if the Senator from New Hampshire can inform me.

Mr. BLAIR. The father of this lady was a purser in the Navy who died in the service of African fever upon the coast of that continent. He left three children entirely dependent. He seems to have been an officer of exceptionally good record. The country gave the three children pensions until they were 16 years of age at an aggregate of $30—that is, $10 for each. All of the children have come of age. Since then one of them has died; another is, as I understand, totally helpless and supported in some charitable institution, I think in the State of Pennsylvania. This applicant is substantially helpless and is receiving assistance at the present time in some medical institution, an infirmary I think, in Philadelphia, and is entirely without the ordinary means of support. She has, I understand, no relatives, no friends, nobody to call upon but the Government, in whose service her father lost his life, or the ordinary charity which the community provides for the poor and the helpless.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to understand the exact ground on which this application is based.

Mr. BLAIR. I will state to the Senator that point if I failed to do it before. She is practically an infant, as much as she ever was, but being over 16 years of age, under the law her pension has ceased, and she makes this application for pension notwithstanding she is beyond 16 years of age, the age when it ordinarily expires by the law.

Mr. WILSON. We have a great many persons in this country who are helpless, absolutely poor, and who in many respects would be deserving of public aid, but of course we can not extend that aid to all such cases; and therefore I think we should be somewhat particular when we grant a pension to know that it is based upon something within the usual line of such governmental action toward the aid of persons who require assistance. Unless something exists in this case which will form a basis for this grant, like that which we have been accustomed to recognize in our pension laws, I should doubt the propriety of establishing this precedent.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will excuse me. This pension, if granted, will be granted on the theory that this is a case of prolonged infancy. The reason why we give to the infant child support until he is 16 years of age, under the pension law, is the fact that he is unable to support himself. This girl, although far beyond that age, is as helpless as she was before she attained to it, and if there was reason in consequence of the relation that existed between the parent, her natural protector, and the Government, he having lost his life in the service of the Government, which if prolonged till the present time undoubtedly would be a sufficient basis for her to depend upon in her prolonged infancy for support—if, I say, under the relations originally existing and which we recognize in the case of all infants prior to their attaining the age of 16 years, we should give pensions, there seems to be no reason upon the merits why this woman should not receive continued support from the Government.

There are very few such cases; I think the Senator is under some misapprehension if he thinks this is a very numerous class of cases. I have been a member of the Pensions Committee most of the time since I have been in the Senate, and I recollect but two or three other cases of the same character which have been brought to our attention, and in one of those the pension was granted. It was that of the idiotic daughter of an Irish soldier who had died in the service leaving a child 3 or 4 years of age to the support of his sister. She was a poor washerwoman herself in this city, and took charge of the child. It was necessary to have considerable in addition to the amount furnished by the Government, but she wrought out a support for herself and this helpless child of her deceased brother, and during the last Congress an application was made for a pension to this child, she having then attained the age of about 20, I think. It was only a question whether the United States would support that idiotic child, strong, vigorous, likely to live many years, or whether this poor washerwoman, in addition to supporting herself, with the infirmities of approaching age upon her, should also support this same child. The Government assumed it, and I think it ought to do so in every such case.

It is for that reason that I am for this bill. I am willing it should pass at $30 a month. Whether we can afford to give that amount in like cases is to be considered, but for my own part I think probably it would all be required. It costs more to support her now than when she was a child and less helpless than she is now. I should be very glad to see the amendment rejected.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I wish to state briefly in connection with this case the rule upon which the committee acted and upon which they generally act upon bills for special relief. We endeavor to conform as near as possible to the spirit of the general law. The general law provides a certain pension for infants on the death of their father dying in the service. They provide special pensions. In this case after the death of the father the three children applied for and obtained a pension of $30 a month for the three, $10 apiece. One of the children after receiving that pension continued until it reached the age of 16 years. One of the children then died; one went into the asylum; and this one comes under disability now, under such disability as the committee thought placed her in the same position as she was between the age of 1 and 16, and we endeavored to apply to her case the general law and put her upon the same footing that other children would stand laboring under that sort of disability, but instead of giving her $10 we give her $15 a month. Now when you go beyond that you go beyond the general law. In just such a case as this you are simply administering charity, and we did not conceive it to be the province of the committee, nor do I conceive it to be the province of the Senate, to administer simple charity. We endeavored to place her case upon the same footing as infants or children would stand up to the age of 16.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not rise to oppose this bill, for I certainly feel like being as charitable to those who suffered as any one should be, but if it should pass I desire to see it based upon some principle by which we may be guided hereafter.

The theory upon which this pension is placed can not stand for a moment when you come to apply the true principles of pensions to it. Let me illustrate, sir. The Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Tennessee say that the construction of the committee was that inasmuch as this person was a pensioner in childhood and is now in an enfeebled condition, therefore they would construe the law to make her an infant now. I understand that to be the proposition. That is utterly fallacious.

You give a construction to this bill that will make this person to-day an infant although she may be 25 years old. Suppose she lives in perfect health until she is 65 years old and becomes enfeebled on account of old age, would you then say she was an infant? On that principle every child that is pensioned to-day under the law up to the time he arrives at 16 years, when he becomes enfeebled by old age becomes an infant and therefore must be again put on the pension-rolls. I do not agree to any such argument or logic as that. If the Government desires to deal in charities that is one thing; but when you come to dealing in pensions you have got to mark out a line by which you will be governed, or else you are all at sea. As I understand the law, pensions are granted for the reason that there is a contract, constructively at least, existing between the soldiers and the Government, to this effect: If the soldier serves his country and is either wounded or disabled in the service, the Government agrees by law that it will provide for him because his condition has been rendered such by his service to the Government. If he dies, then his widow is entitled to a pension. Why? Because the law presumes that she loses his support. How? By reason of wounds or disease contracted by him while in the service of the Government. He being her support, the law then gives to her this aid during her life, and to the child until it is 16 years old upon the same idea and the same theory.

Mr. BLAIR. At this point will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand the Senator to enunciate the true principle upon which pensions are given. The country takes away the natural and legal supporter of the widow or of the child. That is the principle. It is not because the child is technically an infant, but it is because the child has a legal right to support from the parent and needs it, and the country steps in and supplies the place of the parent until there is a legal presumption that the child is able to take care of itself.

Now I suppose the Senator will concede the ordinary legal principle that the parent is responsible for the support of his child, not only until the child is 16 years of age, but, if himself able to give support, so long as the child is in need of support. That legal dependence does not terminate at the age of 16 years or 21 years or 50 years. The parent is legally responsible for the support of his child if the child is unable to take care of himself and the parent is able to take care of the child so long as the child shall live. Now, does the fact——

Mr. LOGAN. This is rather a long question.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the law.

Mr. LOGAN. I thought the Senator rose to ask me a question.

Mr. BLAIR. I rose to ask the Senator if the principle which he enunciated does not in a case like this before the Senate require the maintenance of the child by the country as much after the age of 16 as before.

Mr. LOGAN. The principle applicable to pensions is guided and governed by law. The law provides, and the only theory upon which a pension is granted at all is—when I am speaking of pensions I mean pensions growing out of the law as it exists—that which I mentioned, because of either a subsisting contract or one by construction between the party and the Government, so that when the child arrives at the age of 16, under the implied idea of the law governing and regulating pensions that then the child has arrived at the age at which pensions stop by reason of the lapse of time. Upon what principle that proceeds is immaterial; but it is upon the principle, I suppose, that the child has arrived at an age where the presumption is that it can support itself, and therefore the aid of the Government ceases.

As I said, I am not objecting to this bill; I propose to vote for it, but I want the Senate to understand the principle upon which I shall vote for the bill. I shall not vote for it upon the ground that this girl is an infant, nor upon the ground that the Government is under obligation by virtue of law to give her a pension, but upon the ground that charity demands that the Government may do it, not that it shall do it, but it may do it. I am willing to do it on that principle, but not on the principle upon which pensions are governed or regulated.

One other remark the Senator made applicable to this case and referring at the same time to another case. That was in regard to an amendment that is to be proposed to what is known as the Mexican pension bill, where he proposes to advocate the pensioning of the relatives of soldiers. Sir, if you pension the relatives of soldiers you will pension the whole country. There are very few people in this country but are related directly or indirectly to soldiers. There certainly can be no principle that would cause us to do anything of that kind.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to make an observation?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLAIR. I stated that I proposed when the Mexican pension bill came up for consideration to ask the attention of the Senate to an amendment I shall move to that bill, involving precisely the same principle that is involved in this bill. I do not wish the Senator to proceed in his remarks with the apprehension that I have suggested or shall hereafter suggest the pensioning of the relatives of soldiers unless they are under the necessity of receiving aid; nor do I propose to suggest the pensioning of any relatives of soldiers that are not already entitled to it by existing law.

The Senator will remember that we have always in our pension laws from the foundation of the Government till this forenoon recognized the principle that it was our duty to maintain, so far as a reasonable pension would do it, the dependent relatives of soldiers. We have already stigmatized them in our whole body of pension laws from the foundation down as paupers if to give them that sort of assistance which I hold is their just due from the Government is to treat them as paupers. In the amendment which the Senator gave us some admonition in regard to yesterday morning, there is simply the suggestion that the Mexican pension bill be made applicable to those who are in need of help from the country. That is all, and it is a principle that we have applied universally in our pension laws.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not rise, as I said, to discuss the general pension laws, or how they should be made applicable to individuals, but merely to state the principle that would govern me. The bill now before us can not be placed upon any principle that is found in the law in reference to granting pensions, but I shall vote for it for a different reason, and that is that this lady is a deserving person, and I am willing to extend the charity of the country to her; but not because she is entitled to a pension.

We must have some rule by which we shall be guided. In reference to the bill mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire, in regard to the pensioning of soldiers of the Mexican war, that is a very different proposition. That has no relation whatever to this. To the proposition to pension the Mexican war soldiers the same rule would apply as would apply to pensioning soldiers of the war of 1812, or the Revolutionary war, not on account of wounds or disability, but on account of service; and it is on that principle, differing entirely from the principle that is attempted to be applied to this bill, that that measure rests. You can not, by any possibility, apply the principle on which you give a man a pension because of his service to a person who has rendered no service. So the distinction is clear and broad. One you give for charity, and the other for service rendered to the Government. One rule applies to wounds or disability; another rule to service; and there are cases for the application of charity, beyond the limit of the law, and you do it merely because the persons are disabled and not able to take care of themselves, though they have performed no service to the Government, as in the case of this young lady. Her father, doubtless, was a gallant man. She drew a pension during infancy, but has passed the age where the law allows a pension to her. Therefore I say on the ground of charity I will put her on the pension-roll, but not on the ground of service, or because she is entitled to it on any principle on which pensions are granted.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am also for this bill; but I am for this bill because I think that the Government is under an obligation to maintain this girl, now as helpless as when she was in law an infant, by reason of the service rendered the Government by her father, and his death in the cause of the country. I think it is an obligation, and I cast my vote for this woman upon a principle and not upon a loose charitable exercise of benevolence on the part of the Government as a great corporation entirely outside any of its legitimate functions. The principle, if it be a principle, which the Senator from Illinois has enunciated is that he gives this not as a matter of obligation but as a matter of charity. If that is to be taken and deemed as a principle and to be acted upon, there is no reason why the Government of the United States should not yearly make its contributions to foreign missions and the maintenance of charities anywhere within or without the country; and whenever it is possible to do good to a human being the Government of the United States is at liberty by taxation to take the money of the people of the United States and to appropriate it to that good purpose, or good it may be simply in the judgment of the Government; while the mass of the people might look upon it in an entirely different light.

I think if we give this pension at all it should be upon some principle, and the principle on which the committee acted is precisely the same reason which is at the base of the general law, that the natural protector of this girl has been taken from her by the Government, and her helplessness continuing after she is 16 years of age, the obligation on the part of the Government is in morals, and it ought to be in expression and in general law, the same as though she were still helpless by reason of not having attained maturity physically. That is the principle; and when the reason of the law fails, as it is presumed to fail at the age of 16 ordinarily, a child being then able to support himself, then the general law fails to give a pension; but if the reason continues the law should continue; and in the few special cases that exist throughout the country it is better that instead of depending on general enactments they be left to make their specific applications for pension based upon precisely the same principle as exists under the general law. That is why I am for this bill.

Now, in regard to the Mexican war soldiers' pension bill, the committee saw fit to report in that bill an amendment extending the assistance of the Government where it is needed. It is not proposed by the committee to give to the Mexican war veteran who may be wealthy, entirely beyond need, what the Senator from Illinois calls the charity of the Government. I think we are under a moral and a legal obligation, which we should recognize, to aid every Mexican war soldier who now is in need of pecuniary assistance from any source whatever. The primary obligation, I think, is upon the people of the United States to give their pecuniary aid to those who have exposed themselves in war and in battle for its existence and its defense. That is why I am for giving to the Mexican war soldier, wherever he needs aid at all, aid as liberally as we vote to any pensioner; and unless we apply that principle we are in great danger of very soon being called upon to discharge obligations or to expend the revenues of the country to an interminable and fathomless extent.

Since this matter has been referred to I will state that I propose when that bill comes up for discussion to move an amendment, which is not reported by the committee, which will give to every soldier of any war in which the United States has ever been engaged, the Mexican war, the Indian wars, and the late war, assistance from the Government when that assistance is needed by that soldier, provided his dependence is not occasioned by any fault of his own. We may as well understand that if we are to extend this charity, as some call it—I think it is justice due—to the Mexican war soldiers without any limitation, there is no way to stop or prevent the extension of a like pecuniary assistance to the million Union soldiers who will justly demand it at our hands forthwith.

We must seek out in this matter some just principle and apply it to all the soldiers of all our wars who are under the necessity of receiving aid from any source, and if we give it from the Government at large it is no greater pecuniary burden upon the American people than it is to devolve this support upon the local communities where the soldiers happen to reside. No more assistance is needed in the one case than in the other, and I think it is far more just to devolve this support, this pecuniary assistance, upon the overflowing Treasury of the national Government, to maintain and to perpetuate which the soldier rendered his service and involved the Government in this obligation, than it is that he shall remain classified with the ordinary paupers of the local communities in the various States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I do not know that I myself understood the Senator from New Hampshire when he said that he proposed that this pension should be fixed at $15; otherwise, he was afraid that the Committee on Pensions would make no favorable report.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know whether the Senator understood me to say so. I said something substantially like that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Substantially. Well, I do not know where the Senator finds a warrant for making that statement. It certainly was a strange statement to make upon the floor of the Senate. It was strange that a member of the committee who comes here subscribing to a report of the committee should rise in his place and say that he resorted to this as a sort of pretense or pretext or legerdemain to get the committee up to the point of recognizing the right of this claimant and giving her a pension of some kind. That, I understand, is the position of the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, the Senator perhaps might, if he took the pains, state that in a little more palatable and acceptable way, but I will not trouble him to go over it again. He can state it as he pleases.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not think I could state it more plainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps not, as I understand it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That was my design; I wished to be understood on that point. That is the position of one member of this committee. I did not know that members of the committee came on the floor of the Senate to explain their particular modes of movement in the committee-room. I shall understand it hereafter, however.

The Senator from West Virginia who reported this bill gives his own bill a very feeble support; and while he does not state it quite as broadly as the Senator from New Hampshire, at the same time he comes into the Senate Chamber and begs the Senate to beat his own report; as I understand, advises them to come on and attack it. These gentlemen have brought here from the committee-room what was done there. If I remember aright, in the committee-room no word was said on this matter except by the Senator from West Virginia and by the Senator from New Hampshire. I did not hear any attack made on this bill in the committee-room.

Mr. BLAIR. I would suggest that the Senator, before he testifies——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I was going to suggest to the Senator that before he undertakes to give an account of what occurred in the committee-room he had better acquaint himself with the facts.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was present.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I must insist that the Senator shall state what occurred, if he observed it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I observed it, and I am willing to state it as far as may be proper and as far as I may be interrogated.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggest, then, if it is proper to state any part of it, it is proper to state all—to give a correct impression of what occurred, or none at all.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is what I propose to do. We are getting to the foundation-rock of principle, as I understand, on this matter of pensions, and we may as well understand it correctly and state properly what actuated the committee.

I did not know before that there was any sort of manipulation required to bring the Pension Committee up to the standard of doing this thing, and I was surprised at this intimation, particularly when the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New Hampshire were, I believe, the only persons in the committee-room who took any part in the discussion or took any interest in the matter. I certainly am surprised. I think the members of the Pension Committee would readily have helped them up to the standard of $30 in this case if these gentlemen who profess to know about the case had only asked us.

The Senator from West Virginia presented the report; he had some doubts about it himself, and so he told the committee. I say the Senator from West Virginia when he presented the case to the full committee had some doubts about it. Am I right?

Mr. CAMDEN nodded assent.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator who had the case in hand when he presented it to the whole committee said he had some doubts about it, and when the Senator from New Hampshire found that $30 a month was given he burst out in an exclamation that he thought that never would do, and himself proposed $15 to the committee. Am I right?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it proper to state what occurred in committee, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa rises to a point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order that this colloquy in the committee-room ought not to be repeated in the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. I simply say that the Senator from——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will suspend till the point of order is decided. The Chair is of opinion that it is not in order to allude to proceedings which took place in committee except upon a motion to recommit a report. Under the parliamentary law, when it is proposed on account of some irregularity in proceeding in committee to recommit a report, allusions to what took place in committee are permitted, but beyond that it is not in order to allude to opinions or statements of members occurring in committee. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If any motion is made to recommit this bill, I very much prefer that the Senator from West Virginia, who has charge of it outside and inside the committee-room, or the gentleman from New Hampshire, who was the only other member of the committee who took special interest in the case, should make the motion. I do not desire to recommit it.

Mr. BLAIR. I call the Senator to order, unless this matter is to be all gone into.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have not gone into it.

Mr. BLAIR. I beg the Senator's pardon. He must know that he is out of order in what he has just said or he must know very little about what occurred in committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from New Hampshire was allowed to say, and was not called to order, I think, for saying that he was in favor of this proposition of $15 in the committee-room because otherwise he feared that he would get no favorable report. That he has stated on the floor of the Senate, and it was to that I was directing the attention of the Senate at the time. I always supposed it was out of order to bring up in this body the proceedings inside of a committee-room; but when the gentleman himself stood on the floor of the Senate and proclaimed it, and when he desired that I should state the facts, I told him I would most cheerfully as far as I might be called on to do it, and I should like somebody to go further——

Mr. BLAIR. I did not request the Senator to state the facts. I only asked that if he undertook to state anything he should tell the truth. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please be in order. The Senator from Nebraska will refrain from making any further allusion to what took place in committee, the point of order having been raised.

Mr. MCMILLAN. May I inquire of the Chair under what rule of discussion we are proceeding now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the general rules of parliamentary law.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Under the rule governing the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We are not on the Calendar under the eighth rule. This bill was taken up by unanimous consent during the call of committees for reports.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is consistent on the part of the Senator from New Hampshire. He wanted to know what took place in committee, and then he says he does not want anything said about it. Now, Mr. President, it was wrong and against the rules of the Senate for the gentleman to make the statement he did as to what took place in the committee-room, and why he sought to inveigle the committee into making a favorable report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please suspend. The Chair will state to the Senator that observations that a brother Senator is endeavoring to inveigle a committee are not in order. The Chair, as the debate is getting somewhat personal, must enforce the rule.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The personality commenced when the Senator arraigned the Committee on Pensions——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be. The Chair now thinks personalities must stop on all sides.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am a little at a loss to separate personality and principle in this discussion, and now it becomes somewhat important to know. We have been admonished and instructed and directed on this occasion as to what we should do as a matter of principle, and a good principle of course must first be established in the committee-room; from the committee-room it comes into this body, and then we are presented, if I may be allowed to say so, with the spectacle of what took place among the members of this committee. I am indulging in no personality; but the spectacle exhibited in this body is first by the Senator who presented the report, who gravely and willingly stood up and admitted that what I stated was true; and there we were stopped then from a discussion further as to whether certain other things were true; but I have a right to stand here and repel this imputation, if I may be allowed so to term it, this insinuation——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that observations of that character are not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the President hear me through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the President must stop the Senator when he transgresses the rules of order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly; but if the sentence were allowed to be concluded it would show that I shall be very glad to be in order. I said that when a member of the Senate arose in his place and cast reflections, suspicions, or imputations upon a committee of this body, that committee through one of its members had a right to repel them.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. VAN WYCK. Am I in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Nebraska is not in order, because if the Senator from New Hampshire was guilty of what the Senator from Nebraska now imputes to him, he was out of order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; but since he was allowed to proceed with this charge unchallenged——

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator means to be understood as intimating, however remotely, that the Senator from New Hampshire cast improper reflection upon the committee or any member of it, he is either grossly mistaken or intentionally false——

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is that in order?

Mr. BLAIR. One of the two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It may be in order, I will say to my friend, when we gather together again in the committee-room.

Mr. BLAIR. At the first meeting of the committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I am anxious——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary question. Does this debate proceed by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. The bill was laid before the Senate by unanimous consent, and it is not under the eighth rule for five-minute debate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will cheerfully hear any suggestion the Senator from Massachusetts desires to make, and will be most happy to follow any course he may suggest.

Now, Mr. President, this matter would have gone along naturally in its proper course except, as I say, for the statement to which I have alluded, and I thought when a statement of that character was made in reference to a committee, although made out of order undoubtedly, it ought to be noticed. I did not choose to call the Senator to order, for I desired to hear him, but other members around me who are punctilious, and who have order and parliamentary law at their fingers' ends, with great propriety might have done so. The committee acted upon this matter. They, I think, cheerfully would have made this pension $30 a month but for a statement I made a few moments ago, which has been declared out of order, and therefore I respectfully submit and will not take the liberty to repeat it again. The report at all events comes here. I am certainly willing as a member of the committee, I know that the members of the committee are willing, they undoubtedly would have been happy to have agreed to the larger sum except for the obstruction placed in their way at that time not by themselves.

I was happy to hear the Senator from Tennessee when he stated that, if anything was given to this woman, enough should be given to support her. That is a basis of legislative action in regard to the matter of pensions. I understand the Senator from Tennessee—may I have his attention for a moment?—to take the position that, if this woman was to be given anything, she should be given enough for her reasonable support.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me a word. I inquired of the Senator who had the bill in charge if the fact had been ascertained that this person was wholly dependent upon the pension. He answered that that fact had been ascertained. I then inquired if the committee had satisfied itself that $15 a month was sufficient to support her. He answered that the committee were satisfied it was not. I asked him then, if it be a pensionable case, why the committee had reported an amount insufficient for the support. That was about, if not literally, what passed between the Senator from West Virginia and myself.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I understood the Senator from Tennessee correctly, and I was glad to hear the announcement. I was glad to hear him lay down that as the basis on which pensions should be granted. Now I start from there, and I am happy to meet that out of the committee-room.

The Senator from New Hampshire says there are but few such cases. There are many if they could reach Washington; and the great difficulty, as he knows, is that we have no general law under which these cases can be reached, and I for one have felt that we should stop in the committee-room hearing special cases and bring in some general law which could reach everybody, the woman in Washington, the woman in New Hampshire, or the woman on the prairies of Nebraska. But it has not been so, as we know, and most of the special cases of the kind which are provided for are those which reach and come up to us from Washington, where great social and political influences surround them so that they can be heard. And I would say to my friend from New Hampshire that when we can pause long enough in the Committee on Pensions to frame some general law, the tragedies to which he referred so eloquently a few days ago, the tragedies as he called them in the Pension Department, will not agitate us. That is what I desire.

One thing is remarkable—and I have a right to allude to that—that in the various cases which come before the committee in great numbers from the city of Washington, the wives of rear-admirals and the wives of commodores, and the wives of majors-general are able to secure prompt attention. We find that sometimes in one year from the time the sod covers the dead body of a rear-admiral or a commodore or a major-general, or in less than a year, the application of the widow will go into and come out of the Pension Office. Why? Your widow in New Hampshire can not enter the Pension Office and get out in a year; your widow in Tennessee can not enter the Pension Office and get out of it one year. It is time that thing stopped, and when we can have some general law we shall be able to stop it.

I thank the Senator from Tennessee for declaring the doctrine upon which pensions should be granted, and I say to him that I trust the Committee on Pensions will soon present a bill that will increase the pensions of widows from $8 to at least $12 per month, and then I trust no one will stand up to oppose that, because I can say, in the language of the Senator from Tennessee, if you give a pension to those who are needy, necessitous, and poor, then give them enough to take them out of their unfortunate and impoverished condition. If $15 be not enough for this woman single, will anybody in this Chamber rise and tell me that $8 a month is enough for the widow who is left with a family of children to rear, and whose husband perished on the battle-field, and whose resting-place is marked only by the board that records the burial of an "unknown soldier?" I thank the Senator from Tennessee for that, and I trust the time will come when not only to this woman, to the commodore's widow, and the rear-admiral's widow, and the major-general's widow, but to the widow of the soldier who fell and was buried in an unknown grave, the same degree of liberality will be extended, and on the same basis that you apply to those who are specially provided for, carefully looked up and nursed by all the peculiar influences which surround everything that comes before any committee of this body from the capital of the nation.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I hope my friend from New Hampshire does not misunderstand me. I was in favor of any amount that might be placed in this bill, no matter what. The Treasury, he says, is overflowing, and this is infinitely the best way to deplete it. Let us raise the pensions of the widows of the common soldiers, let us raise those who have been struggling, let us make haste to take the widows of soldiers out of the poor-houses where they have died, let us see to it that the last days of every man who fought for the Union are made happy, whether he served one or two or three or four years under the flag of the Union, by the generosity of the Government which will give him sufficient to subsist himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire in one word to explain the view in which the bill has been reported. It has been sufficiently stated that the committee think this is a case of practical infancy, to begin with. I think these children have continued in infancy although the disability under which this young lady now labors did not exist precisely as it now does at the age of 16.

I am disposed to support similar applications of this kind. I should not be willing to go so far as some Senators might be willing to go in pensioning all children of soldiers who might at a later period of life become disabled. I doubt whether we can go to that extent, but it appears to me that this is a case where it is eminently proper for Congress to grant relief. I shall be glad, if the Senate is so disposed, to allow the bill to stand as it came from the House.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President, I do not intend to prolong the discussion, but I wish to state that establishing a precedent of this kind is a matter of grave consideration. While this is a very worthy case and appeals largely to the sympathy of the Committee on Pensions and of the Senate, yet there are thousands and thousands of cases of a similar kind, and if we are to grant a pension in one case of this kind we can not well draw the line against pensioning others.

There is this consideration also that had influence in my mind and also that of the committee: that this young lady's disability may not be permanent. If she is pensioned now the pension will no doubt be a permanent pension. The circumstances presented a good deal of doubt to the minds of the committee, and for that reason the committee, instead of allowing the full pension of $30 a month passed by the House, thought it wise to reduce the allowance to a smaller amount.

Personally I feel that this case possesses peculiar merit, and considered alone and by itself there would be no wrong done in pensioning the party at $30. The question is more in reference to the precedent that is established by the granting of this pension.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, if I were to put this bill upon the ground on which the Senator from Illinois places it, I could not vote for the bill at all for any amount; but I believe the spirit and intent of the statute which pensions the dependents of soldiers is based upon the idea that there is some duty resting upon the Government to give that support which the soldier, if he had lived, could have given during the inability of these dependents to support themselves. I think that is the principle upon which the statute rests that gives pensions to the dependents of soldiers. The law fixes arbitrarily in respect to children the age of 16, upon the presumption that at that age children may be able to support themselves; but in a case of continuing disability or inability to support themselves, as in this case, I think the equitable view of the statute would extend the same rights to those children if wholly unable to support themselves by disability, by blindness, by spinal disease, as in this case, or any other disease that renders the dependent wholly unable to support himself. I think in principle we can afford to extend the pension in such cases, and for that reason I am inclined to vote for the passage of this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I should like, inasmuch as he can not agree with the principle that I suggested, to call his attention to one point. He says that the law being fairly construed would place this person in the same condition as though she were a dependent, and on that ground entitled to a pension. Let us illustrate it. A soldier does not receive a pension unless his disability occurred while in actual service. This disability did not occur while she was under 16 years of age and drawing a pension. Hence the principle that the Senator suggests can not apply, for the principle which applies to pensions is that the disability occurred in actual service. The pension given to this girl was up to the time she was 16. Apply the same principle to her and the disability would have to occur prior to her arriving at that age.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The argument of the Senator is strictly technical, and, according to the technical construction of the statute, I concede that the Senator is right; but I repeat the spirit and intent of the statute that gives a pension to the dependents of a deceased soldier rests alone upon the idea that there is some obligation on the Government to support those dependents who are really unable to support themselves. Now, even though the disability did not occur while this party was within the age of 16, being dependent, wholly unable to support herself, I am inclined to construe the spirit and meaning of the law to extend to her, and I hope the Senator from Illinois will not argue me out of that inclination and force me to believe that it is a naked charity that we are voting, for I can not vote a charity to this applicant or any other.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to argue the Senator out of any opinion that he has fixed in his mind, but I desire to put myself correctly on the record, for I am voting for it as a charity, and not as a pension resting upon any principle whatever applicable to pensions.

If the principle that the Senator advocates in reference to these persons is correct, let us carry it a little further. If it is a correct principle that the law must be construed to support all persons incapable of supporting themselves after the age of 16, I ask how far it would go? There is not money enough in the Treasury to pay it to-day. There are perhaps one-third of the children of soldiers, the female portion of the families, who probably, if turned out into the world at the age of 16, could not make a living, and upon the same principle that the Senator advocates every one of them should be entitled to a pension. I say that is not the principle. The law fixes the principle. The law terminates the pension at the age of 16, and after that every dollar that is voted is not on the principle that pensions are given, but it is on the principle that you extend the hand of charity to those who are not capable of taking care of themselves, and on that principle I am willing to do it, and on no other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MEAT EXPORTATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred a resolution in relation to the discrimination made against the United States by foreign governments in regard to meats, &c., to report on the second branch of the resolution, the committee having already reported upon the first branch by bill some time ago. The second branch of the resolution is:

And the committee is further instructed to report what discriminations are made against exports from the United States by the tariff laws of the principal countries of Europe and America, especially France, Germany, Mexico, and Brazil, by reason of commercial or other special treaties or agreements with more favored nations, and to report the causes which led to such discriminations, the efforts, if any, that have been made to remove them, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to place the United States on an equal footing with the most favored nations.

The committee have instructed me to make a report, to which is appended a statement of the tariff laws of the principal countries of the world. In connection with this report I present a concurrent resolution which I wish to offer if it is in order at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order as part of the report of the committee. The Senator from California from the Committee on Foreign Relations, in obedience to a resolution heretofore adopted, reports on the subject of that resolution. The report will be placed on file. He also reports a concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations upon the second branch of the resolution of the Senate, adopted January 22, 1884, in relation to discriminations made by foreign governments against exports from the United States, &c., together with the documents accompanying said report, the same being the tariff laws of the principal countries of Europe and America, be printed, 2,000 copies for the Senate, 3,000 copies for the House of Representatives, 500 copies for the use of the State Department, and 500 copies for the use of the Treasury Department, in all 6,000 copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The petition of Philip Schatzle was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, in which it is set forth that the petitioner was a citizen of the United States by naturalization and went back to Germany in 1869 and has become unable to support himself, and he asks the United States to support him. I am instructed by the committee to report back the petition adversely, and I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. At the time that the Committee on Claims reported on the bill (S. 85) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, the minority of the committee asked and obtained leave to submit their views. The majority report was printed. I now submit the views of the minority, and if it requires an order at this time to print them I ask that the views of the minority be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority on the subject named will be received according to the previous order of the Senate if there be no objection, and will be printed.

Mr. DOLPH. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 511) for the relief of the State of Oregon, the bill (S. 655) for the relief of the State of Nevada, and the bill (S. 2191) for the relief of the State of California, being bills authorizing the repayment to the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada of 15 per cent. of the direct tax of August, 1861, paid by those States respectively, instruct me to report back the bills and to report an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill authorizing the payment of the several sums due those States in accordance with the precedent of two years ago by which the State of Kansas was paid in like manner. I ask that the report be printed and the bill laid on the table, and that the proposed amendment to the appropriation bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon from the Committee on Claims reports back the bills named by him. Is the report adverse to these bills?

Mr. DOLPH. The committee report an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill providing for the relief of the several States mentioned, in accordance with the bills, which may be considered to be a favorable report; but it is a substitute. I desire the bills themselves to lie on the table until I see what action is taken by the Committee on Appropriations. If they should report the amendment, then I shall wish to take up the bills in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bills and they will be laid on the table. The Senator from Oregon also presents a report.

Mr. DOLPH. There is a report, and I present an amendment to the deficiency bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon presents a report which will be printed under the standing order. The same committee submits an amendment to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, which will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

UNVEILING OF MARSHALL STATUE.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing had two resolutions referred to it concerning printing the proceedings attendant on the dedication of the Marshall monument. The first resolution was a Senate resolution to print 10,000 extra copies. We find that the expense will be above $500, and therefore it comes under the rule requiring the assent of both Houses. Hence we report a joint resolution and have added to it the substance of a joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] providing for an engraving of the state of Chief-Justice Marshall to accompany the report of the proceedings on the unveiling of the statue.

The joint resolution (S. R. 88) providing for printing the proceedings relative to unveiling the statue of John Marshall, late Chief-Justice of the United States, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed and bound 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Joint Committee on the Library respecting the erection of a statue to John Marshall, late Chief-Justice of the United States, 3,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Joint Committee on Public Printing be, and is hereby, directed to procure an engraving of the statue of Chief-Justice Marshall, to accompany the report aforesaid, and for the purpose of engraving and printing said engraving the sum of $1,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the resolution will be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to increase the number allowed the Senate to 3,500, so as to make it one-half the number allowed the House, which I think has been the rule that has been adopted here in the publication of documents for a long time, and which I desire to see adhered to. The House is given 7,000, and we ought to have half that number, 3,500.

Mr. ALLISON. Then you must increase the total to 10,500.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; I propose to increase the total number to 10,500.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee will have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend, in line 3, after the word "thousand," by inserting "five hundred;" so as to read "ten thousand five hundred copies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes to further amend, in line 6, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to read "three thousand five hundred shall be for the use of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 235) to print additional copies of certain publications, to report it with an amendment. I think the Senate will have no objection to considering the resolution when it is read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That whenever the Public Printer shall have received a sufficient number of orders for copies of the Reports of the Tenth Census of the United States, or for the Compendium of the Tenth Census, or for the Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion, or for the Rebellion Record, accompanied in each case by the cost-price thereof, with 10 per cent. additional, to warrant, in his opinion, the expense of putting the plates to press, he shall cause an edition or editions thereof to be printed: Provided, That the number of copies thus at any time printed shall not exceed the number ordered and paid for in advance of publication.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment to add in line 7, after "Record," the words:

Or for the volumes already published, or to be published hereafter, of the Index Catalogue of the Library of the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better have that printed and look over it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is already printed, excepting the two lines of amendment. I can make a brief explanation that will perhaps answer the Senator's purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the explanation. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAWLEY. The existing law permits any citizen, in view of the publication of a Government work, to pay a sum equal to the cost and 10 per cent. added, and have as many copies printed as he chooses. These orders are but seldom given in advance of the printing, because the people do not know when a work is coming out, and they think they will get a copy from a Member of Congress perhaps. After the regular editions of these very valuable publications referred to have all been exhausted, applications are continually coming to the Surgeon-General's Office and to the Secretary of the Interior, I understand, and certainly to myself, and probably other Senators, asking for these volumes. Now, if it be made known that persons can deposit money equal to the cost and 10 per cent. added, and that upon a sufficient number being ordered to make it justifiable the Public Printer will then go to press with them and supply them, it will gratify a great many citizens at no expense to the Government.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Connecticut if it would not be well to include in that list of books the first five volumes, or either of them, of the Records of the Rebellion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that is in the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if there is included in his resolution the Medical and Surgical History of the War, a work of very great value to the medical profession.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is in the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I should like to know the cost of this.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is the trouble. People do not order these books because they do not know their cost. I should like to have the cost stated. That is what I want to inquire about.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this resolution shall be passed the Public Printer will undoubtedly, at the request of the Surgeon-General's Office and other offices, prepare a little circular or brief statement giving the price, and that can be sent in answer to these numerous inquiries, and then the people throughout the country who are anxious to get these books and are willing to pay any price for them, as they say, will have the information before them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY. I presume Senators know, but it is perhaps proper to state, that the stereotype-plates of these books are at hand. The expense will be the cost of paper and press-work with 10 per cent. added, which only practically covers the cost.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE AT DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask leave to make a report from a committee. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 450) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a ponton wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa," to report it with an amendment and to ask for its present consideration. It will lead to no discussion. It is merely an amendment to a bridge bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The ammendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a ponton wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa," approved March 3, 1875, be amended by striking out of section 2 of said act the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. There is a report attached to that bill. It is short and I think it had better be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks that the report be read.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill is in accordance with the views expressed by the War Department in its letter to the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. The report——

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is the House report which accompanied the bill. It is not a report of the Senate committee. The letter accompanying the bill as reported by me contains the views of the engineers and of the Secretary of War, embracing the report of the Chief of Engineers. If that be read it will give the information the Senator from Delaware desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asked that the printed report which accompanied the bill be read. It is not a Senate report; it is a House report returned with the bill. Does the Senator desire that it be read?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEYMOUR in the House of Representatives February 12, 1884:

The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 450) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a ponton wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa," respectfully report the same back with the following recommendation:

That the bill be amended by adding to said bill at the end thereof the following words, to wit, "Provided, That said draw or draws shall not be less than four hundred feet in length."

The reason for the proposed amendment is that it seems to the committee that a minimum length should be fixed by the bill, and that such length should conform substantially with the length of the draw in the railroad bridge to which the proposed bridge is to be joined. And the committee recommend that said bill, when amended as aforesaid, be passed, which recommendation is founded upon the views of the War Department, as expressed in the following correspondence:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 28, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter dated the 19th instant, from the Committee on Commerce, by its clerk, inclosing H. R. 450, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a ponton wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa," and requesting that the views of this Department on said bill may be communicated to you.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that there is no objection to the passage of the bill in question, as the interests of navigation are fully protected, the draws and location being such as may be ordered by the Secretary of War.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN, Secretary of War.

Hon. E. W. SEYMOUR,
Of Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word only in reference to this matter, that it may go upon the record.

The original act required that the opening in the bridge over the main channel of the river should not be less than five hundred feet wide. That was found to be impracticable in building, and this bill simply changes that so that the opening shall not be less than four hundred feet wide over the channel of the river. That is the only change made.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2210) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HILL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2211) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Shaw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a bill (S. 2212) for the relief of John R. Harrington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2213) granting a pension to P. W. Bradbury; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present in connection with that bill the affidavits of Capt. William Henley and Dr. John Laughton, and ask that they be received and referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill and other affidavits already filed.

The affidavits were received and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2214) for the reauditing and settlement of the accounts of Robert Crittenden, late marshal of the United States for the district of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2215) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to overrule and reverse the decisions of all inferior officers of the Treasury Department in respect to all matters of account; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND introduced a bill (S. 2216) for the relief of George H. Pettigrew; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2217) granting a pension to Sarah E. Price; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

A bill (H. R. 5639) extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Wyoming Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 6409) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory.

PRINTING OF CORRESPONDENCE.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, of California, it was Ordered, That two hundred copies of the correspondence respecting the Ward claims and the claim of Charles E. Hill, against China, transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States, May 7, 1884, in response to Senate resolution of March 12, 1884, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair under the rules to lay before the Senate the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 529, being the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise to morning business which I hope the Senator will not interpose to prevent the introduction of.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his motion?

Mr. BLAIR. I should like the motion to be entertained, but I will waive it for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again recognize the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yesterday the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, reported to the Senate the bill (S. 2169) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army of the United States, upon the retired-list of the Army, and it was passed. I was not in the Senate Chamber at the time it was reported, being necessarily and unavoidably detained out of the Chamber just at that particular time. I did not know that the report had been made until this morning. I desire simply to say that I did not concur in the report of the Committee on Military Affairs and should have voted against the passage of the bill.

Mr. VEST. As I am about to leave the Chamber, I wish to make a statement in regard to what is contained in the public press this morning with respect to a vote taken yesterday in the Senate. I refer to the vote on the bill to place General Grant on the retired-list. The statement is made in the press this morning that the vote was unanimous in the Senate on the passage of the bill. I voted against the bill. I did not call for the yeas and nays, nor did I make factious opposition to it, because two years ago when the same bill passed the Senate I voted against it and spoke against it, and gave my reasons then for my opposition to it. I have no personal hostility to General Grant at all, but I am opposed to the principle of the bill. I make this statement now in order that this assertion that that bill passed unanimously may be corrected in so far as I can correct it by a personal explanation.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes, be taken out of its position on the Calendar and set down for Wednesday or Thursday of next week for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire give way? The Chair has recognized the Senator from New Hampshire to move to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

Mr. BLAIR. This is simply a motion for a special order. I suppose it will occasion no delay. I yield to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] moves that the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes, be made a special order for—what time?

Mr. CULLOM. Wednesday of next week, the 21st.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to make the bill a special order for Wednesday, the 21st day of May, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. COKE. I desire to say simply that I shall vote against making any special orders, and for the reason that I believe we ought to proceed and work upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope Senators will allow this bill to be taken up. It is a very important bill, but I do not think it will take a great length of time for its consideration. It is the bill in relation to the establishment of a commission to regulate interstate commerce. I ask that the Senate be allowed to vote again on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will put the question again. The Senator from Illinois moves that the bill named by him be made the special order for Wednesday, the 21st day of this month, at 2 o'clock. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. CULLOM. I call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter is not the subject of debate. The Chair is unable to think that two-thirds have voted in the affirmative, and will divide the Senate.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 16, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Florida (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. INGALLS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am requested to pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The vote of the Senator from Kansas is withdrawn.

Mr. HAWLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I do not know how he would vote. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—23.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 13th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. 2093) to provide for the appointment of an acting Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution;

An act (S. 258) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Ark., to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 621) for the relief of William L. White;

An act (S. 677) for the relief of the estates of James Vance and William Vance;

An act (S. 975) for the relief of T. J. Boyles, administrator of the estate of Marcus Radich, deceased;

Joint resolution (S. R. 81) filling an existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and Joint resolution (S. R. 82) in relation to ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

The message also announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 269) for the relief of M. P. Jones; and

An act (S. 241) to repeal section 8 of an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. BLAIR. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COKE. I do hope the Senate will vote down the motion and that we shall proceed to work on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senate will vote up the bill and proceed to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate proceed to the consideration at this time of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. INGALLS (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DOLPH. I have agreed to pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] who is absent.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	George,	Lapham,	Pugh,
Blair,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Call,	Groome,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Conger,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vest,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Voorhees.
Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,

NAYS—12.

Bayard,	Coke,	Maxey,	Vance,
Brown,	Garland,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Williams.

ABSENT—37.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Anthony,	Fair,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Farley,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Camden,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Wilson.
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Palmer,
Colquitt,	Jackson,	Pike,
Dolph,	Jonas,	Platt,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to strike out the letter "s" in "successors" in line 9, so as to read "successor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that change will be made.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know whether it would be necessary for the bill to go back to the House on account of that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Any amendment would render it necessary to send the bill back to the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he do not press his amendment.

Mr. HOAR. It is not in order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the first reading of the bill shall be for amendment? In the ordinary course of things the bill will be read through before it is open to amendment unless it be the pleasure of the Senate to order otherwise.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill is very short. I think it had better be read through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will then be read without amendment as the first reading proceeds.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I do not propose to take the time of the Senate in anything like an elaborate discussion of the provisions of the bill. I was heard at some little length upon the same subject-matter when the Senate bill having the same general purpose in view was up for discussion. It may be remembered by the Senate that the bill I refer to, the Senate bill reported by the Committee on Education and Labor of this body, was reached in its regular order on the Calendar and discussed in the morning hour for two days in succession when it was displaced by an objection, and passed into that collection of business from which we shall probably never hear anything more, which is classified as under the ninth rule. Unless it should be the will of the Senate by affirmative action to take up such bills out of their natural order, that they will ever be reached in the regular order of time does not seem to me at all probable, unless the life of Congresses should be enlarged beyond two years.

Meanwhile the House of Representatives have discussed and have passed a bill having the same object in view, which has come to us, been referred to the same committee of the Senate, and reported back unanimously with a recommendation in favor of its passage. It has been reported back as it came to us from the House by that committee without amendment, not because in the opinion of the committee the bill might not be very considerably improved. In fact there are features in the Senate bill which in their judgment are important, and which by being incorporated in this bill, or that bill being passed separately itself, would inure to the advantage of the bureau of labor statistics if one is to be established. But taking into account the contingencies that attend on legislation and the strong desire that the committee felt, responsive to a still stronger one as we believe in the country at large, for the establishment of a bureau, and considering that imperfections in laws immaturely passed, if there are any, can be rectified by future legislation, the committee thought it quite desirable that the bill should be passed and become a law as it is, without being returned to the House of Representatives for amendment. It is for that reason that they have united unanimously in the recommendation of the passage of the bill, ignoring several important features which they think will ultimately by experience be found to be necessary and which will probably hereafter be incorporated in the law on the subject. Still as the bill is here and has in it the substantial thing, the bureau of labor statistics, if it be once established, the work which it will actually accomplish, even without any amendment, will probably be what is expected by the friends of the measure in substance.

The bill has been read at length, and, as I stated in rising, I do not wish to trouble the Senate with anything like a systematic discussion of its merits or of its provisions. I will, however, ask the Secretary to read a letter from Mr. Nimmo, our present Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, which is written in reply to a request from Mrs. Charlotte Smith for information upon this subject, such information as he, the most experienced of our Government officers perhaps upon the subject, could give for her guidance and for the guidance of others who are interested in the matter. I ask to have the letter read, as throwing some light upon the matter, which will be useful to the Senate. This lady has expended a great deal of time in earnest, careful effort upon the subject. She is the president of the Woman's Industrial League of America, and is in fact a pioneer whose labors have been most useful thus far with reference to the condition of her own sex and this subject-matter as it interests the people at large. I ask the Secretary to read the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the letter will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1884.

MADAM: In reply to your inquiries I would say that I am not surprised that you should be disappointed and even a little vexed at finding that the Government of the United States does not supply statistical or other exact inform*t'on in regard to the wages of labor, hours of employment, and generally as to the condition of the laboring men and women of the country. This has been a cause of wonderment to me as it is now to you. From the time of the organization of the Government, the country and especially Congress has needed statistical and other exact information in regard to the laboring classes for the intelligent discussion of questions of public interest, especially the never-ending tariff question. Congress has established offices of information in regard to agriculture, mining, education, commerce, immigration, and transportation, but not in regard to the vitally important subject of labor.

I sincerely hope the bill to establish a bureau of labor statistics passed by the House of Representatives on the 19th ultimo may become a law. I would, however, call it a "bureau of labor" instead of a "bureau of labor statistics." The bill requires vastly more than the tabulation of statistics. It provides amply for an important bureau of information in regard to labor in its various aspects. Figures are but words, the most dogmatic of all words, and they must be used understandingly and honestly in order to express truth and to convey information.

This so-called "bureau of statistics," notwithstanding its vague and very comprehensive name, is merely a bureau of commerce, embracing transportation, immigration, and duties on imports. Its name is a misnomer. I have unofficially and also officially as opportunity has been afforded urged the importance of a separate bureau or department of labor industry, which among other things should be charged with the duty of collecting and publishing just such statistical and other information as that which you seek in regard to the condition of the working women of the country. It would I think be in the direction of bad organization to annex such a bureau to this office, which already has a very large work to do. The chief of the proposed bureau ought to give his whole time to his work, and he ought to be able to call to his assistance men and women who know by experience, observation, and study of the actual condition and needs of the laboring classes. This is a great and complex work, and it must be done, if done at all, by properly trained men and women, both as experts and as clerks. It would take two or three years to get such an office into good working order.

I believe that such a bureau or department, if properly organized and conducted, would be of greater practical use than any of the bureaus or offices of information now in existence under the National Government, among which offices I include the bureau of which I have charge, as well as the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Education.

In all the discussions concerning the powers of the National Government there has never, I think, been any question raised with respect to the power and duty of Congress under the Constitution to supply information in regard to the material interests of the people. That appears to be an undoubted function of the General Government. Lord Bacon has said, "Knowledge is power," and certainly there is no knowledge so powerful as that acquired through the lessons of experience. In this light an office charged with the duty of furnishing information in regard to wages, hours of labor, and other matters of importance relative to the condition of the laboring men and women of the country may be regarded as an arm raised by the Government for the protection and advancement of their interests. Such information is in fact the first requisite of governmental action, protective and defensive in its nature toward that class. The permanency of our form of government depends mainly upon the intelligence of the laboring classes, and an essential condition to their intelligence is their ability to live comfortable lives. It is an easy matter for those who employ labor to obtain information useful in the advancement of their own interests. Every commercial paper in the country which publishes prices supplies instant and exact information upon which they may base their calculations. But such is not the case with respect to the employed. Unless governments collect the needed information touching the interests of labor it will not be collected at all, and the laboring classes will be denied the very groundwork of an intelligent discussion of their rights and interests. But the Government ought, I think, to collect and publish statistical and other exact information in regard to the whole subject of industry, as well as of the employment of labor information of various kinds tending to show clearly the true relations of capital and labor. In other words, it ought to establish a bureau or department having for its object the collection of information which would tend to secure justice as between the employer and the employed. In this view I have the concurrence of a very thoughtful man who has been at the head of one of the great labor organizations of the country.

Wishing you success in your movement, I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOSEPH NIMMO, JR.

Mrs. CHARLOTTE SMITH,
President of the Woman's National Industrial League,
Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BLAIR. In this connection and as bearing upon one of the most important branches of inquiry by such a bureau, I desire to read a letter from the Librarian of Congress. The condition of the workingwomen of the country (all women ought to be working women, and I speak in the most enlarged sense in using the term) is one upon which there are practically no data whatever. If any member of the Senate should set about ascertaining the number of different employments or the various industrial employments in which a woman dependent upon herself can get a livelihoood in this country at the present day he would find not only his own ingenuity taxed, but that of our Librarian, and the best sources of information as to where knowledge could be obtained would have to reply with a negative. I would not know where to look for it except in the general way of the collection of data and facts that is employed by investigating committees.

There are some two hundred and eighty-eight employments in this country through and by which women at the present time may obtain a livelihood. That is a fact which no human being ever was able to state until this same Mrs. Smith to whom allusion has been made had spent something like a year or a year and a half in that active, careful, personal work. Of course a mere enumeration of the sources of employment or the means of livelihood is a thing of comparatively indifferent importance. All that appertains to the condition of women and all that appertains to the condition of workingmen, their social and industrial state, the amount of comfort and happiness that they get out of this human life of ours, is a legitimate and proper subject of inquiry; and I assure you, Mr. President, that it is a subject upon which there is a profound ignorance as a rule on the part of nearly all classes of people in the United States. I plead guilty to possessing very little information upon that subject now; yet my work during the past year has taught me that ordinarily a public man in the United States upon this subject, which should be one of the greatest concern to him, is likely to be exceedingly ignorant. The letter from Mr. Spofford I will read. He says:

Having had much occasion to seek for facts and information relating to the employments of women, I have found in the books upon the subject a very great dearth of statistical information. In fact, nothing of a comprehensive kind, setting forth the numbers of women employed, the wages paid, or the discriminations existing as to the awards of labor, exists in any work now published.

Very respectfully,

A. R. SPOFFORD.

I only read that as indicative of the necessity of the establishment of some vehicle for the collection of information and its transmission to the nation at large, so far as this one branch of inquiry is concerned.

I have here a letter lately received by myself from a citizen of Texas of whom I have no personal knowledge, but I am satisfied from the contents of the letter itself that he is a gentleman of thought and ability. I will read the letter, as indicative of the views of a man of the class to which he belongs. It is dated Galveston, Tex., April, 1884, directed to myself:

DEAR SIR: I was very much interested in the proceedings of your Committee on Education and Labor, which had its principal sittings in New York during the recess of Congress in 1883.

I have not had the pleasure of seeing its report to the Senate, which I hope will be adopted and ordered printed, so as the country will have an opportunity to understand and learn the grievances that were elicited by the committee from so many and diverse sources. There is one thing certain, that if the General Government fails to institute inquiries in this long-neglected and suffering field and to prosecute them still further, there is no hope from any other source, for the States individually will not, within their own territorial bounds, attempt anything of the kind.

By the census of 1880, under the head of "manufactures," you will find that all laborers classed as skilled average annually in wages about $240; that of unskilled less. That would be for the first class named about 80 cents per day for three hundred working days in the year. It is pretty hard for a man to live as such and bring up his children in a proper way on so small and miserable a sum.

I have been a house carpenter for upward of eighteen years and have worked at my calling in Boston, New York, Saint Louis, Chicago, and other places, and I for one testify to the very great accuracy of the census for 1880.

It is all very well, Senator, for men to talk about thrift and saving money, but if a man fails to make, how is it possible for him to save? Again, it is often alleged that workingmen dissipate and squander their small means to such an extent that it impoverishes their families. The laborer after his day's work is done is so tired and jaded that he feels like lying down to rest, and after his evening meal is over he is more intent on taking to bed than to the grog-shop. Why is this so?

From the fact that the hours of labor all over this land are far too long. If in place of working ten he but worked eight, it would give him a little more time to improve his intellectual faculties than is afforded him under the present system. Statistics assure us that the crime of all crimes, drink, is increasing at a rapid and frightful rate. I don't wonder at it in the least. Workingmen—I speak here of the mass—are so discouraged and dispirited at their present position, both social and otherwise, that they resort in all our large towns for an hour or so to dispel and drive away care from their exhausted physical frames.

Take this town of 25,000 souls as an example. Where will one go on a week evening or on Sunday? There are no places of amusement to be had, and his sole resort is to those places where tempting viands are for sale.

In matters of education, why not teach men as well as boys? Why not have, in connection with our day-schools of public instruction, night-schools operated and managed under and by the same authority? And in connection with both to have a good, free public library, where men and women, old and young, could have access to its shelves stocked with good and wholesome books, and not with sickly, sentimental works known as fictional.

Again it is not essential to our political system for the adult male population of the Republic to have a correct knowledge of the Federal Constitution and all laws made in pursuance thereof. Let me say here, from experience, that when this State in 1876 adopted a new constitution, that outside of the body which framed it there was not one in a thousand who had read it. Still it was adopted. Yea, even to this day, few if any know the preamble to that instrument. The same may well be said of all our statute enactments. Who reads them? Who knows them? None but lawyers. All our judicial decisions are as much shrouded in mystery to the citizen as the bible of Mahomet.

Another question and that is the prison one, and here I wish to call attention to an article on Southern prisons in the Century Magazine for February, 1884.

And so he goes on with an enumeration of the various topics and points which are in the minds of the industrial and working people of this country which touch upon their personal interests, the character of the lives they live, and in regard to which they believe and in regard to which I believe there could be a great deal of ameliorating legislation, and would be but for the general ignorance that exists among those upon whom devolve legislative duties.

I wish to read one other letter. I read this partially for the benefit of the Senate and partially for the benefit of the country who will read these letters. It is a letter received by myself on a chance visit to New York a few weeks ago from a man of whom I know nothing, but who, seeing my name announced as among the arrivals at the hotel, sent this letter to me. I commend it to the attention of the Senate because it comes out of the home and the heart of one of the working people of this country, a man, as will be seen from the letter itself, of no ordinary ability, one of those men who in this land of liberty, of equal rights, and of unusual opportunities for material as well as for other advantages, if there were a right adjustment of relations in our society, would be sure to get that which he seems from this letter to lack, that is, the ordinary comforts, and in fact opportunity to earn and to acquire the ordinary comforts of life. He says:

SIR: A glance at this morning's Herald made me aware of your presence in this city. I am a workingman and at present unemployed, and as I know that you are a member of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, I thought I could do nothing better, in an hour of enforced idleness, for myself and fellows than try to point out to you the present state of the working population of this city, which I think may be taken from report as an example for all cities in the Union—I may say in the world. But with outsiders we have nothing to do; even if we had I think charity should begin at home.

Sir, I will first state briefly my own case, as I have reason to know it best. I am at present 27 years old, of athletic frame, and possessing all the physical and mental qualities necessary for an efficient workman. As to my character I defy anybody who knows me or with whom I ever came in contact to say aught derogatory of it. My last and former employers are prepared to recommend me as a willing, careful, and steady workman, and worthy of any trust reposed in me. Still with all this I have been idle the greater part of the time since last New Year, and though I have advertised, answered advertisements, and sought employment in many ways and places I have as yet failed to find any. I can see no reason to ascribe my failure in this respect to any fault of my own. Even if I felt inclined for a moment to think that such may be the case, the fact of 100,000 workingmen being idle in this city during the past six months would be sufficient argument against such an idea. Surely all those can not be at fault. The fault is somewhere else. It is not likely that any man with a human heart could look on and see his wife, his children, his father, his mother, pining in poverty and rags around him, and not avail himself of opportunities that would tend to remove their miseries if those opportunities were at hand. Nay, more, it is no wonder he would seek some way to supply their urgent wants by foul means if he could not do so by fair means. This, and this alone, is what drives the honest workingman to commit crimes against society.

Yes, 100,000 workingmen in this city suffering the miseries of poverty brought on by enforced idleness is a fact which no sane mind can fail to contemplate without alarm. If this is not a matter worthy the most earnest attention of both city, State, and National Government, I do not know what is. Perhaps the Government is possessed by the idea that things are not really so bad, and that they can afford to shut out from their view a little longer the plain facts which would commit them to action, or lay them open to a charge of culpable neglect. But would it not be wiser for Government, would it not be better for all classes if they allowed the sunlight of truth to dawn upon their eyes before it was too late, before the dark night of popular discontent may envelop them in national ruin?

Can the Government of this country with broad acres and a full treasury at its command find no avenue for the American workingman, the American wealth-producer out of the poverty-breeding idleness, out of the degradation consequent on the poverty with which he is at present surrounded? Has he no resource but to drag out a miserable existence as best he can or end it in suicide, as is, alas! too often the case? Has he nothing in this great land to depend on but uncertain health and uncertain employment? Has he nothing to fall back on should these fail but a life of crime or the pauper prison? It is for the Government of this country to decide, and decide speedily. If they are unable to utilize the abundance of means which lie at their hands for the benefit of their country, then let them as honest men, as patriots, resign the task to men capable and willing to do so, men who will give a chance to the American workingman to wear out in healthful, pleasurable, and comfort and wealth producing toil those energies which now corrode in that enforced idleness which is a power productive of an unlimited amount of not only temporal but eternal misery to the human race; "for Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do;" men who will give the workingman a chance of living decently and independently, of raising and educating a family in a manner becoming a Christian people and worthy of society, of raising up men and women who will be a safeguard and a credit to their country and fit to stand nobly by her in the hour of need; men who will raise him out of his present European semi-slavery, out of the squalor and polluted atmosphere of the crowded tenement, out of the miserable slough in which he is now kept by half-time and starvation wages; men who will give confidence to the young workingman whose good sense under the present circumstances may deter him from taking on himself the responsibility of getting a family for which he sees he may at any day be unable to provide, thus leaving this country to be populated by imported paupers, the scum of the Old World humanity, whom the Government of this country takes care of through its emigration bureaus for the special benefit of labor-employing monopolies; men who will disestablish those emigration bureaus and put the money which supports them to the proper use in developing a healthy and intelligent internal population; men who will forbid the importation of foreign pauper labor while hundreds of thousands of American workingmen are idle.

Perhaps I have said enough on general matters. I would be very glad to give you an opportunity of seeing how difficult it is to get work at present, and as I intend trying some of the workshops, warehouses, and factories in the city again on Monday, if you were disengaged I should be glad to call on you, and if you were pleased to take the trouble of visiting those places with me you could plainly see the veracity of my statements. I would ask your intercession in my behalf only that I would prefer working myself up through merit more than political influence, though indeed it seems to be the test of worth nowadays.

Your obedient servant,

JOHN E. MORRISSEY,
545 West Fifty-Ninth Street, New York.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Where did he start on his journey from?

Mr. BLAIR. He writes from his home in New York a letter addressed to me, seeing my name casually in a paper. Being in trouble, without employment, he struck out blindly, not knowing what else to do, I suppose. To such a letter I could make no reply, only to hope that he might in some way find relief. Of course there was nothing that I could do for him, and if I could he is only one in a hundred thousand.

It is not to be supposed that this is a fair picture of the great mass of working people of the United States, because the larger portion of those dependent upon their labor have employment; but nevertheless so it is that cases of this kind exist, and exist all over the country; and the picture which this man gives us of his actual condition is that of an angel of light enjoying the rewards of Paradise as compared with many others which I have personally seen during my investigations of the last year.

I have read these two letters as indicating that there is a line of investigation, that there is a class of facts which it is desirable that the lawmakers of the land should be better acquainted with, and that the masses of the people throughout the country should know more in regard to, and which facts can never be properly and authentically developed so as to obtain public credence, or if these statements are untrue, the contrary can never be well established until by careful and official investigation the truth itself shall be made known. A sphere of this kind, and a very much larger one, would be the legitimate sphere of action of a bureau of labor statistics.

In regard to this bill I have received, as one or two other members of the committee may have done, a letter from a very intelligent colored man, a leading man in his race, complaining that while the bill casually mentions the Chinese it says nothing of investigations in regard to the condition of the colored laboring population of the country; and he insists strongly that there should be an amendment of the bill stating specifically that the bureau shall investigate the condition of the colored working people of the country. The suggestion, if based upon an actual deficiency in the bill itself, I should consider of great importance, and that it should be amended for that cause; but I do not think it essential. In fact, there are reasons why I think the bill had better not recognize any distinctions of race or of color. It is now general in its provisions; it applies to all working people, to all legitimate subjects of inquiry for a bureau of statistics. It is well that the colored man should come to understand and that the white man should come to understand that there are no distinctions of race or color in the eye of the law, that the duties of such a bureau would by the general provisions of the law creating it require as careful and as thorough investigation into the condition of the colored laborer as of the white laborer, and in fact that its investigations should be made with the utmost impartiality and its labors not in any sense whatever directed by reason of any circumstances like color, race, or condition. They are merely incidents attached to the human being. The human being himself is the substantial thing, the integer, and the colored man is as much covered and protected by the scope of the bill as is the white man.

This letter is written by Mr. Lee Nance to me, and as I find I am detaining the Senate longer than I proposed to do, I shall ask permission of the Senate to print the letter with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD with the remarks of the Senator.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: As a result of a talk I had with Mr. HOPKINS, of Pennsylvania, Saturday, I take this opportunity of addressing you. It is to earnestly and solemnly protest against the Senate passing H. R. 1340 in its present shape. It is imperfect in a most important particular. This was pointed out to Senator GEORGE in a letter addressed to him the 21st ultimo, and he no doubt by now has called your attention to it, even should you have discovered it before, which, considering your great services in behalf of the educational bill, seems more than likely.

The bill is imperfect because it fails to authorize the commissioner it creates to make his inquiries respecting the labor of the country with reference to race or nationality. This is most unfortunate, a serious imperfection, and it should be cured. It can be done easily. I am not alone in wanting it done. See the herewith inclosed articles from the Washington Post and People's Advocate, both well-known and leading and influential journals in this section of country. Mr. T. Thomas Fortune, editor of the New York Globe, considers the matter in a letter to me, and hopes for its favorable action at the hands of the committee having it in charge, and whose chairman you are; and I am the possessor of expressions on the part of numbers of other persons of profound thought and large fields of action.

In almost every noticeable and mentionable instance of American life the white man, the black man, the red man, or the yellow man may be found either summering it in luxury or wintering it in sore hardship, and there each is known, recognized, and honored or dishonored to the extent that he is, as such. That this is so now, always has been so, and quite probably always will be so, not only in the United States since it has been such and while it continues such, but everywhere else one or the other of these personages may dwell, temporarily or permanently, none will deny. Why should the commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics be allowed to ignore so bold a truth in his hunt for information respecting the material condition of the labor of the country, how it is encumbered, and how it may be improved?

True your committee reported the bill back to the Senate and recommended its passage as it came from the House the 25th ultimo, yet I pray that you may not interpose any objection to the Senate amending it by inserting, after the word "thereof," in line 18, the words "with reference to race and occupation," and striking out, in line 20, "Chinese labor." If no such amendment is proposed and made a part of the bill ere it reaches the White House, I assure you the pressure will be great to have it then and there vetoed. President Arthur will not fail to see and take advantage of an opportunity to do unto the patient, eager, truly loyal colored men one act of hard-earned justice which he may gratefully remember and consider in the near and remote future as a great and patriotic one.

Sincerely yours, I am, obediently,

LEE NANCE,
922 Eleventh Street Northwest.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator understand that as the bill is now framed the chief of the bureau would inquire and report as to the special employments of the colored people in this country, how many are employed in any particular class of manufactures or in agriculture?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that it requires any report with reference to them as colored people, but it applies to all working people, and applies to them like other working people. It does not apply to them as a class. It does not recognize classes, except in one phrase where it speaks of the Chinese.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not the point of my inquiry exactly. I understand that some colored people desire the statistics to show the number of their race in the various departments of industry in this country, and I desire to know from the Senator fron New Hampshire whether he is opposed to the statistics showing that, or whether the bill as it now stands would authorize the chief of the bureau to make inquiries of that sort and to report them in his statistics.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no doubt that the bill authorizes the collection of statistics as bearing upon any particular class. If the colored people as a class are in a different status from any other portion of the working people of the country, there is no reason why they should not be thus classified under the ordinary operation of the bill as it now is, just exactly as though all the colored people of the country were factory operatives.

There are now in this country in the various States bureaus of labor statistics instituted as follows: In Massachusetts, in 1864; in Pennsylvania, in 1872; in Connecticut, in 1873, but since discontinued; in Ohio, in 1877; in New Jersey, in 1878; in Missouri, in 1879; in Illinois, in 1879; in Indiana, in 1879; in New York, in 1883; in California, in 1883; in Michigan, in 1883; in Wisconsin, in 1883; and in Iowa, in 1884. I do not know in regard to all of those bureaus, but so far as I do know they all possess the power contained in the Senate bill of paying the necessary fees, examining witnesses, and obtaining information under oath. The bill as it comes from the House does not possess that feature. As will be remembered, that feature was strongly objected to by several members of the Senate when the Senate bill was under discussion; in fact, so far as I could judge, that was the principal feature objected to by any member of the Senate. That provision is not to be found in the bill now under consideration.

I ask further to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a communication that I received from the Federation of Labor Unions and Knights of Labor of the District of Columbia, which they desired through such remarks as I might make to lay before the country. It is of some little length, and is an able and important document; but I do not think it important, if the Senate will give its consent for printing in the RECORD, that I should detain the Senate by reading it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the document will be printed as part of the Senator's remarks.

The paper is as follows:

Memorial of the Federation of Labor Unions and Knights of Labor of the District of Columbia.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, for and on behalf of organizations that infold two millions of voters in the Republic, and soon to embrace a still larger number, address you in relation to matters affecting the present and future welfare of the great mass of citizens—those engaged in physical labor employments, usually styled "wage-laborers," whether in connection with the mechanical trades, machinery, or otherwise.

Our minds are agitated and alarmed at the rapid development in the country of influences that operate oppressively against the material interests, as well as the happiness, of the people, both individually and at large, and which threaten in the near future, as we and they believe, not only our means of living in comfort, but also our freedom and liberties, and, therefore, unless timely arrested and regulated by the Government by legal means and peaceful remedies, must sooner or later eventuate in public disturbances and scenes of civil commotion and bloodshed.

Those who have heretofore spoken in our behalf before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and similar committees on the part of the House, have variously set forth grievances, already experienced and felt, resulting from the malign influences to which we have adverted, and, in some particulars, detailed remedies have been suggested and presented for your consideration. Among the latter we invite your early and earnest attention to those we proceed to mention, to wit:

IN THE SENATE.

A bill (S. 140) to establish a bureau of statistics of labor.

A bill (S. 141) to fix and regulate the hours of workmen employed by the Government.

A bill (S. 398) to aid in the establishnent and temporary support of common schools.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 38) to enforce the eight-hour law.

A bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a department of labor statistics.

A bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States.

A bill (H. R. 6560) establishing a graduated income tax.

A bill (H. R. 4592) to pay employés of the Government wages hitherto withheld in violation of the eight-hour law.

A bill (H. R. 5273) to regulate steam-engineering in the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 5274) to abolish convict labor in the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 5275) to abolish the truck system in the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 6266) to regulate wages, fares, and hours of labor on the street railways in the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 4272) to amend chapter twenty of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia concerning mechanics' liens.

A bill (H. R. 414) to restore the wages of printers, bookbinders, and pressmen employed by the Government.

Each of these proposed measures is addressed to the welfare of the people at large. Even as to those seemingly applied directly to the District of Columbia they are indirectly broader in their significance and embrace more comprehensive thought. They speak for themselves. Nor is it proposed on this occasion to restate in their separate support the facts and reasons that have been adduced and urged heretofore in their advocacy by those who have appeared from time to time before your committees. We are painfully aware that they are, separately and collectively, only measures of relief from present afflictions and sores, superinduced by deeply-seated disease in the body-politic, requiring remedial agencies to remove only resident with the profoundest lore and experience in association with society and government, and only to be applied by the most commanding courage, inspired and nerved by humanity. We will not, however, refrain from submitting a few words in reference to the bills having relation—

First. To the number of hours to constitute a day's labor on public works;

Second. Bearing on the Government contract system as to public works;

Third. Prohibiting the importation of foreign pauper labor under contract; and Fourth. Establishing a bureau of labor statistics.

These matters for the most part blend together and are full of import.

The act of Congress heretofore passed constituting eight hours a day's work on all public works, although followed by the proclamation of President Grant at the time to give to it effect, merely held the cup of promise to the lips to break it to the taste, in view of the contract system of the Government remaining in force; and when a case involving the question of its efficacy was submitted to the courts the act and proclamation both proved mere mouthings, inasmuch as the wage-workman was still completely at the mercy of the contractor. But the conscience of the Government seems to have reposed in peace over the performance.

When the enormous increase and application of labor-saving machinery is considered, substituting and performing the labor of millions of men as handicraftsmen, the argument derived from the fact becomes irresistible and unanswerable in favor of reducing the hours of labor on the part of wage-laborers, in that manner allowing for the employment of all who are willing to labor that they may live honestly and honorably; and if through machinery all work necessary to society may be done in fewer hours of work per day, all in society working, the opportunity and leisure to all will be afforded for mental and moral culture, healthy recreation, a higher enjoyment of life, increased happiness, and the elevation of the species as a whole, fulfilling the mission of the Republic as a republic by the human family. All this is too obvious to the reflecting mind for illustration. But when by the act of the Government itself all governmental works are let out to contractors, the contractor is enabled to exact from the uncontrollable necessities of wage-laborers his own conditions as to hours of work, restraining those he employs from all the advantage, enjoyment, and improvement to which we have referred, while at the same time many of those who otherwise might be employed at living rates upon the same works are not only excluded but often thrown upon society as a burden, either requiring charitable public support and sustenance or become impelled, sometimes even imperatively, by physical want, privation, and suffering, into criminal courses, avenging upon society the ills they feel and the degradation and misery they endure. The results involved rest with the Government and can not be ignored with impunity.

Nothing lasts save in proportion to the labor expended upon it; nothing physical and material; nothing intellectual. It is an old saying, with meaning in it, that "Rome was not built in a day." Only through the laboring throes and agonies of thought and suffering, through the laboring experiences of countless centuries, were educed and erected the moral and religious systems that have remained unshaken since their deep and strong foundations were laid in the ages past, and which continue to meet the mental vision wherever it turns in the present, as indestructible and imperishable as the eternal principles of right, justice, and humanity that enter into their composition and which they grandly illustrate, while political and social empires less firmly based, and built and shaped with ideas less solid, have been annihilated, and all that inhabited them have passed away like the unsubstantial pageant of a dream.

As indications of national character and national institutions the public works of a great people, such as we believe ourselves to be, should be as substantial as we would have the pillars of the Republic to be, as continuing as we hope ourselves to be in the successive, and as enduring as we desire our fame. Yet by the assignment of such works to the "lowest bidder," under the contract system adopted and practiced under the Government, not only is the wage-laborer subjected to the mercy and caprice of the contractor as to working hours, with or without law, and forced through his absolute necessities—the inexorable demands of life to live at all—virtually under a "tyrannis," by which he is deprived of the common heritage and right of the people to moral and intellectual improvement, to healthful recreation, enjoyment, and happiness, rendering him indeed a slave de facto if not de jure; but the contractor at the same time, being only interested in the sordid pecuniary gains he may realize under his contract, hastens forward the work as expeditiously as possible in a manner to make a pretentious showing for the time being, but shamelessly defective, wanting in solidity, and soon to disintegrate, to become disjointed, to begin to crumble when scarcely finished, and from the instant of delivery requiring ceaseless alterations and repairs to prevent rapid dilapidation.

But private capitalists and monopolists, either in their individual, partnership, or corporate capacity, have gone far beyond the Government in practices militating against wage-labor interests, and are now engaged actively in various directions in contracting for labor itself in the gross, from among the most indigent and degraded foreign multitudes of Europe and Asia, at minimum rates of wages, in competition with the home labor of the Republic, seeking in fact to reduce in price or to supplant American labor, profoundly filling our minds with apprehension as to our future condition and demanding at our hands timely self-protection. It can not have escaped your observation that recently a correspondence has been brought to light containing proposals to introduce such labor in the gross into this country from among the lazzaroni of Italy. At the same time voices are heard, even in unexpected quarters, not advocating precisely "slave labor" it is true, but calling for "servile labor," the miseries and oppression attendant upon which are such that in comparison the state and condition of the slave, both physically and morally, by reason of the pecuniary interest that the master has in his person, may be said to be Paradisian.

It is known, moreover, that at this very moment, in your own body, among the representatives of the people, is a member who, in accordance with the covetous wishes and sentiments of certain manufacturing capitalists in the region from whence he comes, openly sustains and defends the importation of cheap Chinese labor in the gross, to the displacement of American labor, the better to increase their profits and add to their plethoric amassments. Such indications of present tendencies, threatening in the near future our welfare and that of our wives and children, are enhanced in their significance by the fact, as statistically estimated, that during this year 450,000 from among the heterogeneous masses in Europe will be poured upon our shores. Thirty years ago, with a sparse population relatively to the country, and when the demand for labor in its multitudinous forms was far greater than the supply, we would not have given to these matters serious thought, but now they are to be viewed and considered in the presence of more than fifty millions already within our limits, pressing upon employments in order to live and support their increase, soon through natural procreation to reach one hundred millions, and this, too, while capital is becoming more and more concentrated, monopolizing and absorbing more and more, into fewer and fewer hands proportionately, the means and possessions of the country, and while, in addition, labor-saving machinery is being multiplied and perfected more and more each and every year.

Furthermore, while thus capital, always inhuman in its voracious greed, like the horse-leech, is seeking to pauperize labor; while thus monopoly is remorselessly seizing upon all the avenues of employment commanding labor; while thus labor-saving machinery, in its rapid development and application, is constantly reducing the relative numbers of those whose labor is essential to the actual needs of the country; while thus population, already ample for every legitimate demand upon labor, is nevertheless, through immigration and natural increase, multiplying each and every year in a ratio fearful to contemplate in its swift-speeding and terrible effects upon the body-politic socially and politically; while thus, in these and other modes and forms of operative causation, wage-labor is being pressed upon and driven to extremities, pointing plainly to the ultimate tillage of the soil as the most hopeful avenue of resort for the redundant mass of labor displaced from mechanical employments, the spectacle is presented of the absorption not alone of real estate more and more by the wealthy classes of society, but of the public lands more and more by millionaire companies and millionaire corporations, and even millionaire foreign noblemen, and these are being engaged more and more in settling upon them indigent foreigners in the gross, thereby supplanting our own people and their descendants, ourselves and our children, more and more, assuredly in the future.

The observant eye can not be closed either to the enormous and swift accumulation and concentration of the wealth of the country, of every kind and in every shape, in the hands of capitalists and monopolists, native and foreign, private or corporate, individually few, to the detriment of the many; or to the strong and growing tendency toward the formation of a moneyed aristocracy in our midst; or to the increasing danger of a combination among moneyed oligarchs to grasp the control of the councils of the Government. It is painful to reflect that these developments and results, alarming to popular rights and popular freedom, have taken place in the course of the last twenty years—nearly all, if not the whole of them, since the opening and close of the late civil war. It may be said, indeed, that scarcely a millionaire exists in the land, of any description, whether as a private individual, or as a partnership concern, or in a corporate capacity, or whether in association with railroads, manufacturers, mining, shipping, telegraphs, national banks, or otherwise, whose monstrous accumulations may not be traced back to the period of the civil war, which did not spring out of the bones and blood of the men and the times of that fratricidal and slaughtering war.

It is not an exaggeration to assert that the honorable exceptions to the general fact are rarely to be found in any quarter or in any connection. Before that war very few private incomes exceeded $5,000 per annum, and very few landed properities, North, South, East, or West, exceeded 1,000 acres; and very few mammoth corporate or partnership incomes and possessions existed in any direction. Whereas now we have on every hand not only corporate and partnership incomes, but private incomes, ranging from one hundred thousand to several millions of dollars, net, per annum, and landed estates individually possessed, with corn and wheat rows from five to thirty miles in extent, as in the Northwest, and in the farther West consisting of ranges two hundred and fifty miles in extent, while corporations are holding realms larger than States in the Union, and even titled foreigners have deeds to millions upon millions of acres. In view of the extraordinary change—the sudden and wonderful metamorphic achievement and its methods—is it at all astonishing that the passage of a law should be desired imposing a graduated tax upon incomes in proportion to receipts, at high figures, in support of Government and as a measure of justice and relief to the people? Even the Supreme Court of the United States has spoken with no bated breath upon the subject, and with its grave utterances before us well may the people feel concerned at the fate with which they are threatened. Mr. Justice Miller, in rendering the decision of that august tribunal in a case before it, on the 3d day of March last, uses the following ominous language. He says:

"In a Government like ours the temptations to control elections by violence and by corruption is a constant source of danger. Such has been the history of all republics, and though ours has been comparatively free from both these evils in the past, no lover of his country can shut his eyes to the fear of future danger from both sources. If the recurrence of such acts as these prisoners"—

From the South—

"stand convicted of is too common in one quarter of the country, and gives omen of danger from lawless violence, the free use of money in elections arising from the vast growth of recent wealth in other quarters"—

The North, East, and West—

"present equal cause for anxiety."

Such words from such a source may well arrest the thoughtful attention of those invested with the responsibility of shaping our destinies. It is surely not a pleasant prospect for the people to contemplate, that of being gradually, yet rapidly, reduced to the condition of a widespread "proletariat" in obedience to the behests of plethoric speculators and pretentious mercantile oligarchs, as in the ancient Roman republic at a similar stage of development, with purloined coats of arms emblazoning the panels of their gilt carriages and standing out in bold relief on the fronts of their palatial residences, and with outriders and footmen in livery, which can already be seen along our streets, although we may still boast of being "a representative republic" with institutions of "republican simplicity," and vociferate with stentorian lungs the charming words of "liberty, equality, and fraternity."

Great analytical and philosophical historians have shown how easy were the processes in republics more popularly free and unrestrained than our own by which the people, in similar ways and through similar influences, were converted into mere "proletariates." Mommsen and Macaulay, among others, have raised their voices, echoing with the sad experiences of the past, in warning as to the calamitous ultimate in the United States speeding onward from existing premises. They teach us to know that in national existences no less than in individual instances, facilis est descensus Averni!

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution, as it was when the wilderness pervading the continent had still to be redeemed to the purposes of civilization; when fields had still to be cleared from the forest and opened up to culture; when the lands had still to be drained and prepared for habitation; when the beasts, reptiles, and savages had still to be subdued, and before labor-saving machinery had been brought into play in the usual vocations of life, not only was the broadest encouragement and invitation to labor of all kinds and from all countries a right policy of state, but in view of the existing needs even negro slave labor was thought to be other than an assistant. But all this is now altered.

The circumstances are entirely different, and "circumstances alter cases." At this time, during every winter, hundreds of thousands of those at present within our limits willing to labor for a subsistence, even for bread, meat, clothing, and shelter, whereby life may be maintained without bodily suffering from cold and hunger, have, for the want of employment, to be fed and cared for through the doles of public and private charity. The blatant humanitarian philanthropy of the day, on the part of the shallow egotists of both sexes piling up "Pelion upon Ossa" to fanciful ends, does not serve to divert the attention of profounder and more beneficent minds from the living reality of wretchedness and sinful misery thus existing in our commercial, manufacturing, and shipping centers, in comparison with which the sins and suffering arising either from the relations of the sexes or from the use of intoxicants dwindle into insignificance; and a bureau of labor statistics would reveal the deplorable fact.

As an illustration of the condition of vast multitudes of both sexes, under the most favorable circumstances that are afforded them in our chief mercantile centers, the following extract from a recent issue of the Cincinnati Enquirer is presented. That journal says:

"We doubt if anywhere on earth, except in the coal-mines of England, a more wretched, poverty-stricken, unhappy, and miserable lot of women can be found than the shirt-makers of New York. There are thousands of these women, and they work all day long and part of every night for a miserable pittance. The work is excessively hard. They make the garments for the big dealers, and so great is the competition that a day's labor, extending from 7 o'clock in the morning till 10 at night, results in the munificent stipend of 45 cents a day. They live in garrets and cellars, and they are, without exception, wan, sickly-looking, and weary.

"We had occasion to visit a large shirt-house in Eldridge street where the women were presenting their checks for payment. It was the end of the week, and they had all brought in their work. There were perhaps one hundred and fifty of them in line waiting to be paid at the cashier's desk. They had brought their work during the week, and had received a check for each piece as it was returned. At the end of the week they presented all their checks for payment. The sum which each woman received was actually pitiable, and it is impossible to conceive how they can live and support their families on so little money. As they stood in line I was struck with the extraordinary delicacy of a majority of the faces. There was not a healthy-looking woman in the entire crowd, and the majority had the pallid look common to those who spend the most of their time indoors. Most of them wore faded bonnets and were wrapt tightly in old shawls. They were quiet, self-sustained, and reserved. There was not one among them who did not look as though she was fit for a better livelihood. After the shirt-women in point of wretchedness may be mentioned those who work in factories of various sorts. They are obliged to get to work at 6 o'clock in the morning, and they are not released until 6 o'clock at night. They are herded in the lofts of immense buildings in the manufacturing districts of the city. They make all sorts of things from paper boxes to delicate flowers, and that they have to work very hard is indisputable."

Is the indigence now in our midst to be exorcised by the addition of the indigent masses of Europe and Asia? Is the pauperism now in our midst to be dissipated by the addition of the lazzaroni of Italy, Spain, and Hungary? Are the monarchies and aristocracies abroad to be permitted to colonize within our borders and upon our domains their refuse populations, thereby lifting the burden of care from themselves and relieving their own oppressive social and political systems from so much human distress, throwing it off upon the United States? Has not the time arrived when a law should be passed and rigidly enforced against all contracts for foreign pauper labor, and prohibiting the introduction in the country of all indigent labor?

The policy of the Government has been, is, and should continue to be, cosmopolitan, and our nationality has been, is, and should continue to be, humanity; but in the course of our development as a people, has not the point been reached gravely demanding of those intrusted with our destinies every consideration associated with the present and future welfare of ourselves, our children, and children's children? Is it not apparent that measures should be taken without further delay for the preservation to ourselves of our own inheritance, and for the perpetuation of our own happiness, freedom, and liberty? Surely, for the sake of the Republic and a common humanity, every legal and peaceful remedy should be applied toward the elimination of existing and prospective sources of evil in the body-politic, in avoidance of anarchical scenes and revolutionary violence as the inevitable sequence of want and suffering on the part of the people.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. BLAIR. With these remarks I submit all that I have to say in support of the bill. It is not exactly perfect, as nothing human is perfect, but is more likely to suit a majority of the Senate as it now is than the Senate bill. Having passed the House, if we enact it without amendment it is sure soon to become a law and thereby supply a great want in the machinery of this Government and also satisfy a most earnest longing, not to say craving, on the part of millions of our fellow-citizens for some means through which they can lay before the country at large their actual condition with a view to proper remedial legislation. I trust the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. The committee does not seem to have recommended any amendment to the House bill. I wish to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire at some time to ask unanimous consent to take up and pass a bill which will take no time at all. If anybody objects to it I shall withdraw it at once. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to make that request now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, I have no objection.

URIEL CROCKER.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside informally the present order, and to take up the bill (S. 862) for the relief of Uriel Crocker. I will state before the consent is asked that it is a bill for the relief of a very old gentleman, between 87 and 90 years old, I believe. It would have been reported the first week of the session from the Finance Committee if certain papers had not been mislaid. It is merely to allow some bonds to be issued instead of some that were lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that the pending bill be informally laid aside and the Senate consider at this time the bill indicated by him?

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be read for information at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper officer of the United States Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Uriel Crocker, of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, or to his proper attorney or legal representatives, the sum of $386, being the amount due upon four coupon bonds of the United States of the denomination of $50 each, and upon the coupons belonging thereto, which were payable from July 1, 1866, to July 1, 1881, both inclusive, which said bonds were of the loan of July 17, 1861, payable after June 30, 1881, were numbered 2519, 2520, 2521, and 2522, and have been lost and are believed to have been destroyed: Provided, That he or they shall first file with the proper officer of the Treasury Department a satisfactory bond of indemnity in double the amount so authorized to be paid as aforesaid.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. From what committee was the bill reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. From the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it just reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was reported some time ago.

Mr. HOAR. It was reported on the 6th instant. It would have been reported the first week of the session but for mislaying the papers. The person interested in the bill is an aged gentleman, more than 87 years old, a man of the very highest standing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has there been any report read?

Mr. HOAR. The report has not been read. It is to pay the amount of some bonds, amounting to only $386 in all, which have been lost since the year 1866, neither the coupons nor the bonds having been heard of, on the claimant filing a bond in double the amount of the bonds in the Treasury to save the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the Committee on Finance were unanimously in favor of reporting the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a number of millions of dollars involved in this question of paying for lost or destroyed bonds. There are instances to-day in the Treasury Department where positive proof has been made of the loss and destruction of bonds and those bonds have subsequently come to light. I wish to know the situation of these bonds, so that we may know whether there is perfect security. The question comes up now in regard to the security required. The claimant may give a bond and the parties may be perfectly solvent to-day and the Government may be justified in paying the money. That bond comes up fifty years hence, it comes up seventy-five years hence, the bondsmen, the securities, are utterly irresponsible, dead, scattered to the four winds, but the obligation of the Government still exists and continues. We have to-day several hundred thousands of dollars of liabilities that originated prior to 1842, and the Government holds itself responsible for them. Occasionally one of those securities comes in. All I wanted to know was if this was thoroughly guarded. It is a dangerous step to take.

Mr. ALLISON. I examined this case very carefully, as did the Committee on Finance. It is the custom of the Government, where an absolute loss of bonds has been shown, to pay the parties upon their giving security.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is done where they establish the destruction of the bonds, not the loss.

Mr. ALLISON. I say the "absolute loss" of the bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. The destruction of the bonds, not the loss of them.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; the destruction of the bonds. In this case eighteen years have elapsed, and neither bonds nor coupons have appeared at the Treasury Department; and this old gentleman satisfactorily accounts, I think, for the destruction of the bonds.

Mr. COCKRELL. For the destruction or the loss?

Mr. ALLISON. The statement he makes is simply that the bonds were placed by him in a locked box in a bank vault, to which he alone had the key. At a certain day when he examined the bank safe or box of his the bonds were missing. He supposes that they must have been in some way swept out as waste paper. They have not been heard from in any way from that time to this.

Mr. INGALLS. Swept out of a locked box as waste paper?

Mr. ALLISON. Probably not out of a locked box unless the lock had first been opened. He was in the habit of going to the box and unlocking it and taking out papers, &c.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the amount involved?

Mr. ALLISON. The amount involved is $386.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Iowa should also state that the bonds belonged to one of the hired girls of this gentleman's house, and when they were missing he paid the value of the bonds to the girl.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, yes, those facts appear from the record. I think that the Government will not lose by this operation.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course we can not make an exception, because the bonds may have belonged to a hired girl, and this may be an old man, or anything of that kind. The question is, Shall we enter upon the payment of bonds which have simply been lost and not destroyed? It involves a question, not of $386, but of over $3,000,000. If we enter upon this at all, we have to treat all alike. We have gone as far as this Congress or any preceding Congress has thought it right in the way of general legislation. We have provided that the Secretary of the Treasury, when satisfied of the destruction of any bonds, may reissue the bonds if they are not then payable, or pay them if they have already matured. This is taking a step further. This is saying that if by any cause a bond becomes mislaid or lost it can be paid. That is a dangerous precedent. We ought to confine it to cases of the actual destruction and non-existence of a bond.

Mr. ALLISON. So I agree.

Mr. COCKRELL. If you establish the precedent of paying a bond that has been lost, and that bond is a negotiable bond, and all the coupon bonds are negotiable, all pass by delivery, just like greenback money passes by delivery——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me? I consider myself bound in good faith to withdraw the request for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is entitled to the floor, yielding to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. Do the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. If I have the floor I will yield to both Senators.

Mr. HOAR. I consider myself bound in good faith, if the Senator from Missouri objects to the passage of the bill, to withdraw my request for its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, I am not objecting to consideration, but I want simply to call attention to the fact and to the precedent that we are setting. I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill. I think it is a dangerous precedent, and I do not think it is to the interest of the Government or the people of the country that we should pass a bill of this kind. I simply want to enter my earnest protest against any legislation which will recognize a liability of the United States Government simply upon proof of mere loss, not of destruction. If the distinguished Senator from Vermont will refer back he will find that some years ago he made a report on this very question, and an adverse report. This is not a new question in the Senate. The Committee on Claims had a question of the same kind before them, and we refused to report a bill for the relief of the parties, although the bonds had not been heard of for a great many years. Now, if we pay these bonds and in the course of ten, fifteen, or twenty years hence the bonds are presented, how can the United States avoid their payment? It can not do it; it is bound to pay them. Then it has to take its remedy upon the bond of these sureties, and find the securities and find their estates if it is possible.

Mr. ALLISON. I became satisfied, as I think the Committee on Finance did, that these bonds were destroyed, and our report is mainly based upon that idea. If the Senator from Missouri is not satisfied, he has entered his protest now and I think we may as well have a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

Add after the word "prosperity," in section 342 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

"The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, annually collect and report to Congress the statistics relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and pertinent information relating to all departments of labor and production in the United States, especially touching the pecuniary, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes, and to the permanent prosperity of the productive industry of the whole country; and the salary of the chief of such bureau shall be $3,500."

Mr. GARLAND. I am heartily in favor of the objects which are sought to be attained, and which the Senator from New Hampshire is anxious to attain in his efforts for the passage of the bill now before the Senate. The difference between himself and myself is that I think possibly the mode that I suggest would be a less expensive and a more expeditious and at the same time a more certain way of arriving at the same object.

When Senate bill No. 140, looking in the general direction that the present House bill does, was before the Senate some weeks ago, reported from the same committee, I had read as a substitute for that bill the amendment I now propose. It did not come up in order for it to be offered under the parliamentary rule, that measure going over on the Calendar. We have now before us a House bill on the same subject, which, as I stated just now in general terms, has in view the objects that the Senate bill had which we had under consideration some weeks since, differing, of course, in phraseology and differing in scope and measure to some extent.

It will be perceived by the Senate that under chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes we already have a bureau of statistics. When that bureau was first established by law, as appears in the fifth volume of the Statutes at Large, the word "agriculture" was included with "manufactures" and other words and went into the revision of 1873–'74, but in the revision of 1878 that word was omitted. If the word were placed back in the statute, and it never has legally escaped from it, every object that is sought by the bill now before the Senate, as well as the Senate bill on the subject which was discussed several weeks since, would be accomplished, every end would be reached, of course by different language and different phraseology.

If a separate bill is passed such as is now before the Senate we shall have two different and distinct bureaus, two different and distinct departments upon this subject. My purpose is to put them under one, and as we have already a starting point, as we have already a beginning and a very important beginning in this matter that has been in operation ever since the publication of the fifth volume of the Statutes at Large, why not place this matter under that bureau also, simply enlarging its powers? The Senator from New Hampshire will observe by reading section 342 that—

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw materials, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transporation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity.

I simply continue in the amendment that I have offered the language of section 342 and embrace the subject-matter of marriage and divorce, as to which there is already an independent resolution from the Committee on the Judiciary on the Calendar, so that the country may get all the information possible on that subject, as many petitions have been sent to us and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with regard to it. I then place in the amendment the language sustantially of the Senate bill we had up a few weeks since in reference to the statistics of labor generally, and when that is done and ingrafted upon the system it seems to me we have as perfect a plan as we need at this time, and it gives us all the information that we may desire without an additional expense, except that in the amendment I attempt to raise the salary of the chief of the bureau $500.

We do not take by the amendment the large machinery that is provided for in the bill, but we simply direct the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics now existing to enlarge his inquiries to these two subjects-matter, and they are already relatively connected, and immediately so, with the subject-matter that is now in his jurisdiction under the present law. It seems to me that it is much more convenient, much more simple, much more certain, and surely much less expensive, to adopt this plan and group the whole matter under one head, under the Commissioner we now have, instead of having a large addition to the existing machinery for the purpose of making inquiry into all the details specified in this bill.

The statute that I have read from chapter 10 is general; the amendment that I propose is general, because if you entered into the details of this matter you would have a book as large as the Pandects or Bacon's Abridgement. Necessarily you can not by any law of this kind describe specifically all the matters that come up, and you must leave to the experienced officer of this bureau a discretion to extend his inquiries to these subjects-matter in detail.

I submit the amendment as a substitute for the bill, simply enlarging the present law we have in regard to the Statistical Bureau.

Mr. MORGAN. I simply desire to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas what is the purpose of introducing an inquiry on the subject of marriage and divorce. Does the Senator think that Congress has any jurisdiction over that subject?

Mr. GARLAND. Not at all. Perhaps I should have been a little more specific on that. We have no jurisdiction over legislation on that subject, that I am aware of; but in the petitions that I have referred to which were sent to the Judiciary Committee complaint was made that there was a variety of laws on the subject in the different States and that there was a lax practice under those laws in certain sections by which divorce could be easily procured, and it was deemed advisable by the petitioners that Congress should secure this information for the benefit of the people for any purpose they might want it, as we very often collect information from the people of the country on subjects upon which we can not legislate. It was further supposed that ultimately the States might possibly be brought to some uniformity of legislation on the subject. That is the gravamen of the petitions sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, and in response to which I reported a resolution now on the Calendar which will be reached soon under Rule VIII, and it occurred to me that if the matter was proper at all it could be grouped with the general statistics of labor and other matters on which we are seeking to get information for the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Committee on Education and Labor have very carefully considered this question, and they have considered it upon the application of the various labor organizations representing the laboring people of the country. I suppose that as a matter of argument there can be no good reason why the commissioner charged with this investigation should belong to one Department or another. The efficiency with which the work shall be performed will depend, not upon the Department to which the work belongs or the title which we shall give the officer, but upon his ability, upon his experience, upon his sympathy and interest in the work with which he will be charged.

The laboring people of this country have associated themselves in various organizations. They have asked of Congress that it shall appoint a separate bureau for the purpose of examining into the condition of the laborer and into all that appertains to his interests and his position in the various employments of the country. It is a subject large enough to occupy the time and the attention of the ablest man that can be found in this country, and the faithful and efficient performance of this duty requires not only ability but also experience and special training.

The laborer of all kinds, and especially the manual laborer, as a factor in the general prosperity, as an important interest in and member of the State, is not inferior to any other interest in the country. On the contrary, the condition of the laboring people of the country is first and highest in importance as an industrial and economical question. They allege that their condition has been one of want, has been one of inadequate compensation, has been one of inadequate employment, and they have asked of Congress that facts in relation to their condition in these and other respects shall be investigated and ascertained in an authentic and certain manner as the basis of such legislation, both national and State, as may be adequate to aid them in attaining a better condition.

While the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas may not be objectionable on general grounds, I think that in deference to the opinion of this great interest in this country, than which none is greater and to which all others are inferior, we should pass the bill as they desire it—for a separate bureau specially charged with this investigation. Unquestionably so general a request from so large a body of citizens ought to receive the careful consideration of the Senate, and there can be no disadvantage or injury to the country or any of its interests in complying with their wishes. Why not attach the work of gathering the other economical statistics to the labor bureau, and not the labor bureau to them? If there must be a consolidation of all the official agencies for gathering statistical information, let us establish this bureau, in deference to the wishes of the laboring people of the country, and then add to it the duty of collecting and compiling the statistics of other interests—of capital, of manufactures, of agriculture; but let the people, the laboring people, have the preference which they have a just right to. For these reasons I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I believe it to be my duty to say a word on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, and only a word or two, for what I should be disposed to say has been better expressed by my friend who sits to my left, the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], than it could be by myself.

I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that while the Committee on Education and Labor, in obedience to the orders of the Senate, were last year engaged in investigating the various questions connected with the relations of labor and capital we found a surprising unanimity on the part of the representatives of the labor classes of this country whom we examined or with whom we conferred in favor of a measure of this sort. They had a great many plans of relief to themselves; they differed about most questions; but upon this there was singular unanimity. They all thought that the establishment of a bureau of this sort would contribute largely to their welfare and their happiness. As was remarked by the Senator from Florida, I think the American Senate might well, in deference to the opinion of so large a class of American citizens, pass this bill, even though it might be considered by the Senate that there were sufficient agencies already in existence to accomplish the purposes intended to be accomplished by the bill itself.

I might add, Mr. President, that there is a great deal of discontent and unrest among the laboring classes of this country. There seems to be, so far as my investigations went, an opinion prevailing, if not universally at least to a large extent, that the laboring interests of this country have not been duly and properly attended to either by the State or the national Legislature.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask what he means by the laboring interests of the country—what kind of labor?

Mr. GEORGE. I was speaking principally of the laboring classes of the Northern section of the country, the wage-laborers. I am speaking of wage-laborers.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator refer to agricultural laborers at all?

Mr. GEORGE. So far as I know I have heard no complaint from them.

Mr. MORGAN. This bill, then, does not apply to them?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it applies to all.

Mr. MORGAN. It applies to alien laborers also?

Mr. GEORGE. It applies to all laborers in the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. And the negro laborers in the South?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course; but I say I have not heard the complaint urged by that class that I have heard from others. I have not heard the demands made by that class that I have heard from others.

Mr. MORGAN. I only wanted to know whether the negro laborers in the South had made known any request to have themselves informed about their condition of labor, &c.

Mr. GEORGE. So far as I know they have not.

Mr. BLAIR. I would say, with the Senator's consent, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Alabama, that a portion of the committee which took testimony upon this subject in the South, which did not include my honorable friend who is now addressing the Senate, found in the South the same general expression of views from the same class of laborers as at the North—a desire for increased opportunities for education, industrial as well as common-school education, and for the diffusion of further information as to their general condition among the legislators and what they look upon as the ruling classes in the country. They substantially complained of the same grievances there as at the North, though the labor organizations are not as extensive at the South of course as in the North, because the manufacturing interests developing there have not attained to the same proportions as in the Northern part of this country.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me, I wish to say that I want to find out what this bill means and what the committee mean by the bill, and if they intend to cover all the United States, including Chinese—they have them in here—Indians, negroes, agricultural laborers, fishermen, forest laborers, miners, mechanics, and day laborers in mechanical pursuits and in productive pursuits. I wish to know the extent of the inquiry we are about to make. It is broader than has been undertaken before, and I find that there is probably a disagreement between the Senators on this committee as to what the meaning of the bill is, and before we enter really on its discussion I wanted to know what the committee meant by it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not know that there is any difference between the members of the committee as to the points suggested by the Senator from Alabama. The language of the bill is plain. It embraces all kinds of labor in this country—manufacturing, agricultural, and mining. If there be any difference between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself about the meaning of the bill it is with reference to whether there ought to be separate reports or information giving the number and condition of the colored laborers as distinct from the others. I thought that that provision ought to be made specifically in the bill, and I will give a reason for it, though I do not intend to press an amendment of that sort unless the bill shall be amended in some other particular whereby it will be necessary to return it to the House of Representatives.

I think it is important that the people of this country shall know how the colored labor of this country is distributed and in what it is principally engaged. My observation during last summer induced me to believe that there were very few, if any, colored laborers in the factories of New England. I may be mistaken about it. I visited several; I saw none. I visited some at Fall River, I visited some at Lowell, and I saw none; and I remember at Lowell to have made the remark to a superintendent of a factory there that I had heard of colored people in his factory, and he stated to me that there were none, and gave some reasons why there were none, which it is unnecessary for me to repeat.

Leaving that out, for I do not intend to press it, arguing upon the general principle, I think, as my friend who sits on my left [Mr. CALL] has said, that the American Senate ought to pass this bill if there were no other reason for it (and there are many) out of deference to the wishes of so large and so important a class of our fellow-citizens as the laboring classes of this country. Where they have organizations, where they have considered this subject, I undertake to say they have been unanimous in demanding the passage of a bill of this sort. If all the good which they expect does not come from the passage of the bill, its passage will at least have done this much: it will have shown this large class that the Congress of the United States is not unmindful of their interests and not unwilling to pass laws which look to their advancement.

I hope, sir, that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will not be adopted and that the bill will pass as it came from the House of Representatives, so that there will be no danger of the measure failing by returning it to the House.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from Florida or any other Senator to suppose that I am opposing the investigation they propose here in any particular.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not say that.

Mr. GARLAND. I want the investigation just as broad and comprehensive as it can be made in all its ramifications, but I think it is a very material point for the Senate to deal with, as I thought before when we had the matter under consideration, to have a fixed, certain, and simple system about it. If the phraseology of this bill itself did not indicate most clearly that manufacturers were included in it, it is stated by the friends of the measure that manufactures are contemplated and included in the bill. Under the present law, as I read a while ago in section 342, chapter 10, of the Revised Statutes, this matter in all its bearings, in all its relations to navigation and other business of the country, is placed under the head of the Bureau of Statistics, and the question will arise if this bill passes, which has jurisdiction of this particular question, the present bureau or the new bureau inaugurated by this bill.

This bill takes in all labor, provides for statistics of all labor, covering all that we mean by "labor" in this country in its compass and scope. The amendment I have offered is the material and substantial language of the bill reported by the Senator from New Hampshire from the Senate committee which we before had under discussion.

Now, do one of two things: repeal this chapter in toto or ingraft this legislation upon it, and then you have but one system, and that is simple and direct and certain, instead of having two machineries running. There is no question that if you pass this bill this new bureau will gather to itself the inquiry already provided for under chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, and as there is no appeal expressed and no transfer of powers from the existing bureau there will be an inconsistency. I think it is a very material question, and the simplest, best, and most direct course is to adopt the amendment I have proposed and have one system.

Mr. BLAIR. The legislation to which the Senator from Arkansas has referred, originated, I think, about 1844—I may be inaccurate in my recollection—and from that time until the present the bureau to which he refers has been in existence; but it is impossible to find in the archives of this Government anything of an important character in the line of the data that you get in the statistics of the labor bureau of the State of Massachusetts, for instance, or other labor bureaus in other States.

I think the Senator from Arkansas fails to form a complete conception of the subject-matter of inquiry on the part of a bureau of labor proper. The institution now existing by law, presided over by Mr. Nimmo, the chief, has very little to do with the social condition of the producing classes of the United States or of any other portion of the world. The character of the data which it collects has primary reference to the development and the success of business enterprises, the acquisition of wealth on the part of the wealthier classes, our merchants, those who handle capital, and not those who delve in the mine or who produce the wealth which is subsequently handled for their own aggrandizement by the capitalists of the country. Mr. Nimmo himself, who is frequently referred to as a high authority, and deservedly so, has no such conception of the attributes or the powers of his own bureau as has the Senator from Arkansas. I have here a letter from him which has already been read to the Senate in the opening remarks which I made, and which I had read as anticipating and replying to the positions assumed by the Senator when the Senate bill was discussed a few weeks since; but as it seems to have escaped his attention, and perhaps may have escaped the attention of other Senators, I will read again from Mr. Nimmo himself his own language. Speaking of his own bureau, he says:

> This so-called Bureau of Statistics—

Not of "labor statistics," but "Bureau of Statistics," the Senator will observe—> notwithstanding its vague and very comprehensive name, is merely a bureau of commerce, embracing transportation, immigration, and duties on imports.

That is all he does. He is paid $2,500 a year. What would Senators say to a proposition to take the Agricultural Department, representing perhaps from twenty-three to twenty-five millions of the people of the United States, the head of which it is proposed to make a member of the Cabinet, and put it away under the wing of Mr. Nimmo with his $2,500 salary per year? And here is Mr. Nimmo himself saying that the bureau over which he presides has really no connection whatever with the subject-matter to which a bureau of labor proper would devote itself. He goes on further to say:

> I have unofficially, and also officially, as opportunity has been afforded, urged the importance of a bureau or department of industry which, among other things, should be charged with the duty of collecting and publishing just such statistical and other information as that which you seek in regard to the condition of the working women of the country.

This letter was drawn out by inquiries with reference to information he might have touching the condition of working women. He goes on in reference to a bureau generally:

> This is a great and complex work, and it must be done, if done at all, by properly trained men and women, both as experts and in a clerical capacity. It would take two or three years to get such an office into good working order. I believe that such a bureau or department, if properly organized and conducted, would be of greater practical use than any of the bureaus or offices of information now in existence under the National Government, among which offices I include the bureau of which I have charge.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will not be adopted. I should be very glad to see some Department or bureau of the Government authorized to collect statistics touching marriage and divorce. That may be a matter that legitimately would come under the jurisdiction of a bureau of labor, for there is hardly anything touching the social state that is not a part of the great labor problem of the day. I suppose the Senator wishes, perhaps immediately, a large amount of statistics or information as to the conflicting marriage and divorce laws of the various States, with reference to such instruction as the Committee on the Judiciary may need in framing general national laws over a subject-matter in regard to which perhaps the National Government has very slight jurisdiction. I hope he will not embarrass this bill with marriage and divorce.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the logical point, it seems to me, in this matter, and one that furnishes the reason why the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas should not be adopted, is this: Certainly "manufactures" includes the interest of all who are engaged in manufactures, whether as laborers or as directors of labor, its net results and its gross results, and so of "commerce" and "agriculture." But the principal factor, regarded socially, economically, and in every relation that concerns the State, the most important of these, is labor and the laborer. That is the active and great influence which creates all the others, and which may be affected most directly by legislation, by taxation and tariffs, and which all the other interests of the State demand should be wisely cared for, and the discontents of which should be removed if possible.

Now, whether they are right in their opinion or not, whatever the fact may be—and I do not propose here to take either side of the question—it can not be denied that this great interest, the men, the people of this country, ninety-nine one-hundredths of them, believe that the legislation of this country has been adverse to them, that it has been in the interest of concentrated credit, of great corporations, of wealth, and they have a deep-seated feeling that the statistical bureau heretofore established for the purpose of showing the results of manufactures and agriculture and commerce are directed in the interest of those who control and receive the greater share of the great aggregate results and to the prejudice of labor, and not for the purpose of showing how small a part of the aggregate production falls to the laborers and their families.

Beyond all question the Senate does not need to be told that the history of the world has been the aggrandizement of a comparatively small number of individuals at the expense of the great body of laborers and the poverty and want of the great majority and in the interest of those who have special privileges and advantages, and that this Government was intended to reverse that condition of things and to promote the interest of the individual, of the laborer, of the toiler, of the bread-winner, of the mass of the people of the country, both men and women; and while leaving ample opportunity for individual accumulation, the powers of the Government were to be exercised in the interests of the great body of the people, and not for the benefit of a few as against the many.

Now, sir, there has been and is, as my distinguished friend from Mississippi has stated, a profound conviction that the statistics gathered upon the subjects of manufactures, commerce, and agriculture are not gathered impartially and exhaustively in the interest of the laboring people of this country. I think myself that they have been neglected in respect to the means of accurate information in relation to their condition. I believe that the condition of the laboring people and their improvement is the great question for the consideration of the statesman in this country as it is becoming in Europe. It is, in what way shall we so legislate in the imposition of taxes or the exercise of any other power that the distribution of the proceeds of labor and credit or capital, by whatever name you choose to distinguish the other factor, shall be so made that the individual shall have an abundance of the necessaries and as much of the comforts of life as possible; and as a first step in the direction of knowing how to adjust the taxation of the country, of knowing the effect of our revenue system, whether of imposts by direct taxation or of tariff revenue or in whatever shape, is to know the condition of those who both create chiefly those resources of the State and who most largely pay the revenues of the Government.

These people have asked that the interest of this factor, this controlling factor in manufactures, in agriculture, in commerce, shall be investigated by a person specially charged with that duty, and who shall be in sympathy with them; and this is the demand of 600,000 laboring men and women organized in industrial associations, which were justly described in a very able argument, one of the ablest that has been delivered on economical questions within my knowledge, in the other House recently by a distinguished Congressman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], as beneficent in their effects and as promising greater good to the laboring people than any other. It is the special point they have made that there shall be a bureau specially charged with this inquiry and with collecting exhaustive and correct statistics respecting the condition of the laborer, his family, the amount of his gross production, his education, the houses he lives in, and his general condition in relation to the State and to the various public interests with which he is concerned.

I think the logic of the question is that this is the most important interest in the general production of the country. It is the one which is most directly and easily affected by legislation; it is the one that has been most greatly wronged in the past history of the world, and it is the special interest which deserves to be looked at as contradistinguished from the gross production of agriculture, or of manufactures, or of commerce, or what is termed wealth.

It is for that reason that I think we had better pass the bill as it came from the House; and if the suggestions of my distinguished friend the Senator from Arkansas, which have always great weight with me, and which are no doubt very worthy of consideration, are to be carried into effect, let it be done hereafter by an amendment of the statutes. Let those be incorporated with this bureau of labor statistics, which unquestionably should stand first, not only because they concern the greatest number of the people, but also because they concern the most valuable and important interest in the country.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I support the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas because it is an improvement of the bill sent us from the House.

The inquiry made by the Committee on Education and Labor and reported to the present session of the Senate touching the condition of labor in the country was made upon my motion. I introduced the resolution which led to that inquiry, and I feel very much gratified that that committee have been able to lay before the country so large an amount of valuable information and testimony upon the condition of what are called the laboring classes, and also of the manufacturing or capital classes. I can not, therefore, be put in the category of opposing anything that really tends to give to the acquirement of better information in regard to the condition of the laboring classes; nor can it be supposed that I am not fully in sympathy with any legislation that will give relief to those people. At the same time I do not concur in the statement made by the Senator from Florida that they are the worst abused, the most neglected, and the worst persecuted set of people in the United States.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me? I used no such language as that.

Mr. MORGAN. I gathered that as being the drift of the Senator's argument.

Mr. CALL. Not at all.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought the Senator argued that they were a set of people who had been greatly abused and greatly neglected. I fail to see in the legislation of the United States in all of its past history any real discrimination against the laboring classes of this country as laboring men or as citizens. We have upon our statute-books a tariff which I think operates very unjustly against the operatives, those men who are employed as laborers by the manufacturers. At the same time it must be admitted that the laborers themselves are the men who sustain that tariff. Misguided in respect to its effects upon their own prosperity, they are used by the manufacturers constantly at the ballot-box for the purpose of sustaining the burdens under which they rest. Whether they want to be better informed on that question or not I do not know. I think they should be, and I should be glad of an opportunity of giving them more full and accurate information as to the operation of that solitary law upon our statute-book which has any injurious effect on the laboring classes of this country. In the further debate of this question I think I might well inquire of every Senator who will participate in it to point out any statute of the United States under which the laboring classes are either wronged or neglected, unless it may be this tariff legislation. I am not aware of any other.

There may be a want of information on the part of representatives in both Houses as to the condition of the laboring classes in the United States, and if so it is the fault of the representatives themselves. Our representative system is divided up so that each 150,000 people, or about that number, is represented by a separate representative in the House chosen by the people, and if they and the Senators in this body are really not informed as to the condition of their respective constituencies the fault is that of the Representative and not of the law. I do not believe there is any gross ignorance in either branch of Congress as to the actual condition and wants and necessities of the people of this country. It may not be information collected and tabulated in form so that it can be read by every man; but when you take the aggregate information of the two bodies upon the condition of the people they represent I believe that it is as extensive and as accurate as the information that is possessed by legislators in any country in the world. It would be a convenience to political economists and to social economists and to writers and speculators upon economic questions to have this all collected and tabulated. It is also for the interest and honor of the country that the exact condition of all classes in the country should be known. I therefore am not opposed to collecting these statistics. On the contrary, during the time I have had the honor to serve upon the Committee on the Census, which is since its first organization, it has been a part of my duty that I have most willingly and cheerfully performed to try and assist in the collection of statistics touching every economic question in the United States, and the census of 1880, although not entirely accurate, still more accurate than any that ever preceded it, is a full and complete narrative of the condition of almost every industry of any importance in the United States, and of a good many that are not of any importance, at least not of any great importance.

Now, we have a Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department, presided over by an eminent, able statistician, Mr. Nimmo, to whom the Senate is constantly in the habit of applying for the purpose of getting information upon almost every statistical subject that concerns legislation in this body. The main value of a bureau of statistics rests in the capacity of the man who has its direction and in his integrity. If you have a really able statistician at the head of that bureau, and he is furnished with a sufficiency of clerical force, means enough to get information, he will acquire, digest, and put before the country in an authentic and proper form all the necessary facts to guide us in legislation and to guide the country in its investigation of the moral, social, and economical conditions in every respect. We have such a bureau and we have such a man. I do not perceive the necessity of organizing another bureau to conduct this business, and I think it would be good public economy to place this subject under the control of that bureau, as is proposed to be done by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Some pathetic appeals are made to the Senate in reference to the wants and demands of what are called the laboring classes. It is said that the Senators upon the Committee on Education and Labor in their investigations of this subject through the country have become informed generally by black and white, by people of all classes, South, North, East, and West, wherever they were in the course of their investigations, that they desire a bureau for the purpose of increasing their happiness and their prosperity, and for the purpose of giving more emphasis to the facts relating to their condition, whether it be good or whether it be bad. I should like to gratify any portion of the people of the United States in any desire that they have upon a question of this kind or indeed upon any question. At the same time it is the duty of the Senate of the United States to consult a sound and wise public policy in respect of this as in respect of everything else. I know these 600,000 laborers have a great many votes to cast at the ballot-box.

Mr. CALL. I spoke of 600,000 in the labor organizations.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that they have a great many votes to cast at the ballot-box; they are influential in public affairs, and every Senator on this floor and every gentleman in the House of course is anxious to oblige them. Yes, sir; more than that, even to bow down before them. I understand that very well. I am quite as amenable to that infirmity perhaps as anybody else in the Senate. At the same time an appeal for special legislation ought not to be based upon that ground. It ought to be based upon the public necessity or the public usefulness of the measures we propose to enact, and not upon anything else. If we enlarge the capacity and power of the Bureau of Statistics, as is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, and if that is not a sufficient enlargement broaden it still more; we shall get a very much better system than this bill which is sent to us from the House of Representatives. The Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate are not satisfied with this bill. Every Senator who has spoken upon the question as yet from that committee has expressed some degree of dissatisfaction with this bill, but they ask us to pass it, because they say if you put an amendment on it it is not likely to get through the House again, and we must pass it just as it is because of the pressure of the necessity of having this separate bureau.

Is that a consultation of the public good, or do we in acting in that way and in taking such positions as that in reference to this bill consult a mere clamor or a mere demand of a certain class of the people of the country? If we give them Mr. Nimmo as the head of the bureau, and a sufficient number of clerks to carry on the work, and enlarge the scope of his inquiries so as to get all the information that is necessary for legislation and for public instruction upon these questions, is not that enough? Must we, merely because it is requested, create new offices, appropriate $30,000 or $40,000 a year for the paying of a new set of bureau officers to do the work that Mr. Nimmo is doing, with some additions to it mentioned in this bill, and those additions of a very questionable character so far as their utility is concerned?

When I looked at this bill as it came from the House—for the committee have not changed a word in it—the first question that occurred to my mind was, what is the meaning of a bureau of labor statistics? What is the meaning of this phrase?

> The commissioner shall acquire all useful information upon the subject of labor, its relations to capital, and the means of promoting the material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity of the laboring men and women, &c.

How far is that intended by the committee or by the House of Representatives to extend? This bill comes to us from the House of Representatives, and we must construe its meaning, and if we are not sure that it has the very meaning we wish to impart to it by our votes, then we must amend it so as to have it conform to the sense of the Senate in all of its definitions. Now, I ask how broad is that question which seems to include all human toil? I inquired of the Senator from Mississippi. He said it included the negroes of the South, it included the Indians in the Territories; by express terms it includes the Chinese; it includes the agriculturists; it includes all people who earn their living by labor. The Senator from Florida takes the same view of the question, and I suppose there is no doubt now that as the committee construe the bill, and as it probably will be construed by the officers of this Government when it comes to be executed, this bill includes all men and all women in the United States who earn their living by what we call labor.

Mr. President, that is a very broad grasp of this question, and as I think I can show clearly, a very unnecessary one. There is a large portion of the people of the State of Alabama, and I know it is so in a great many of the States, perhaps all of the agricultural States, who own tracts of land and reside upon them. They are farmers, and they and their wives and children contribute by their labor to the support of the family by the cultivation of the farm and the accumulation of profits, the increase of property, and all that belongs to a laboring community.

This bill requires that—

> The commissioner shall acquire all useful information upon the subject of labor, its relations to capital, and the means of promoting the material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity of the laboring men and women.

This commissioner I suppose will send his emissaries, his agents, into my State among the people who live in the hill country, the white people who own the land and work it themselves, and who would not allow a negro to come within sight of a fence if they could help it. Not only are they not colaborers, they are not associates with them; they are nothing more than the inhabitants of the same country upon terms of ordinary friendship between the races. Your commissioner's employé goes to one of these families and says to the head of it, "You are a laborer; you own this land, it is true; but you toil upon it, you raise your crops from year to year, you support and educate your children; I want to make an inquiry of you for the purpose of making a report to the Senate of the United States or to the commissioner of labor as to the social, intellectual, and moral prosperity of these laboring people upon your plantation; I want to know something about the moral prosperity of your wife and your daughter and your son-in-law and all the people who labor with you on your farm. The Congress of the United States, having nothing better to do, and no better use to apply the money of the people of the United States to, have taxed you along with the other people to the extent of $40,000 a year in order that I might be employed at a rate not fixed by law, but at such rate as the commissioner shall prescribe, to come to your homestead and make an inquiry of you. It is a civil, a polite inquiry, and as I am a sort of census-taker here I must enforce the rule upon you; and I want to know now the moral condition of your wife, this laboring lady, and of your daughter; and I want to know your condition as to material prosperity, and I want to know your social condition. I want to know whether you are in the habit of recognizing as equals the colored people that live in your neighborhood; I want to inquire whether it is in accordance with your views of social duty that you should associate with every person that you meet. What is the rule of social intercourse between you and your neighbor? What do you do if a colored man or colored woman wants to come and sit down at your table and the like? That is part of my duty to make this inquiry about you because you are a laboring man or a laboring woman, and I want to know your social condition." And the Senate of the United States it appears is to send out with the concurrence of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Education and Labor an inquiry of that kind throughout this land!

Mr. President, I would not answer upon the proposition whether "the shotgun policy" would not actually be repeated, as it has been alleged that it has obtained in some places in the country, when these men go out to make such impertinent inquiries as these about the laboring people of the country, and I can not vote for a bill which authorizes an officer or emissary of the United States Government to go to one of these homesteads and make such an inquiry as that. It is enough to inquire as to the material welfare of the people and let their social affairs alone.

Now, Mr. President, in the haste to get this bill through and to accommodate this class of urgent demanders for a new bureau and large appropriations for the expenditure of money unnecessarily, the Committee on Education and Labor and the House of Representatives have neglected to take a view of the question which ought to be put into the bill; that is to say, that the inquiry should be limited to those people who are wage-laborers.

Reference was made to a speech made by a gentleman from New York in the House of Representatives. It was a very able and instructive speech. I think that it would instruct almost any man in the United States to read the speech of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, on the question of labor in the United States and its relations to capital, and he spoke of a great statistician of England who had brought into a compact form exact statistical information in regard to the labor and the laboring classes and the capitalists of Great Britain. Upon what topic did he treat, to what point did he direct his inquiries but to hired labor, to wage labor? But that is not the limit of investigation provided for in this bill. The committee, in their earnest desire to accommodate the pressing demands of the people, who say they want information on this subject, have neglected entirely to draw the line of demarkation between the man who works for himself upon his own plantation and in his own workshop, his blacksmith-shop, or his wheelwright-shop, or whatever it may be (and there are thousands of such), and the employé, the hired laborer, who works for him upon wages.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to suggest that the number of men necessary to acquire all the information in America called for by this bill would be very great.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose it would take as large an army as General Grant commanded at the time of the surrender to acquire all the information sought in this bill. I have not a doubt it would to get it all together in any reasonable time.

The committee, I repeat, have totally neglected to address this bill to the subject they ought to have inquired about.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator pleases, it may be that he is correct in his statement, but in some eight or ten of the States of this Union they have established bureaus of labor statistics, and he will find that the phraseology of the statutes which they have adopted is quite as general as that which is contained in this bill. He will not find much to criticise in the terms of this bill unless his criticism shall extend to the enactments of the entire country.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if those eight or ten States have succeeded pretty well in their work. Is it satisfactory?

Mr. BLAIR. Some of them have just established their bureaus in the last year, three or four of them. The State of Massachusetts, whose bureau has been in operation since 1864, if I remember, has certainly accumulated a vast amount of very useful information, and it has done so under a law which is much more general and indirect in its provisions than this very minute and specific bill which the House of Representatives has sent to us.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, it would be a very interesting inquiry why we should supplement the work of Massachusetts, which doubtless has been well done, with work to be done by the Congress of the United States. We find that as many as ten States—I believe that ten were mentioned to-day—have these bureaus of statistics, and I remember that the Senator mentioned one State that had given up the system; I suppose because that State did not find profit enough in it to justify the expenditure. That was the State of Connecticut, if I am not incorrect in my recollection of his statement. If these States have been so successful in the establishment of these bureaus to acquire this identical information, let me ask why that is not satisfactory to the laboring men in those States?

The Senator from Florida, I believe it was, or the Senator from Mississippi, informed us that the great demand for this bureau of labor statistics came from the North and the Northeast, right from the very country where these States have established these bureaus, and where they have acquired all the information that is necessary to a perfect understanding of the social, moral, industrial, material, and I suppose religious condition of their people. That being so, I can not understand why it is that the Senate of the United States should be engaged in the establishment of an additional bureau merely for the purpose of repeating or supplementing the work done by these States.

Mr. BLAIR. I would suggest to the Senator to consider in connection with the suggestion he is now making the fact that notwithstanding in every State there are bureaus of education and superintendents of public instruction, the United States for many years has found a Bureau of Education very serviceable; and nowhere, from no source, is the Bureau of Education so strongly supported and so profoundly appreciated as from the educational bureaus and superintendents of the various States.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from New Hampshire brought in his great bill, and I concede that it is a great bill because it has made a great fuss in the world, to educate the people of the United States through an act of Congress. He was particularly careful, and so were the Senators on this side who voted with him, to exclude the Government of the United States from having anything to do with this education beyond merely furnishing the money. That was all. Now, following up the same line of argumentation and the same line of policy, I would suggest to the honorable Senator, if he finds any States in the Union who are too poor to establish and maintain bureaus for statistical information, that he would grant a subvention to those States in order to enable them, as he did in the matter of education, to go on and perfect their system.

Mr. BLAIR. I certainly will assure the Senator of my ardent support of any such bill. If there is any State in the Union that finds it difficult to support its bureau of labor statistics, I think that the United States should assist it in doing it or should assume the work of collecting the information and its diffusion for itself. The probability is that the bureau of statistics of labor which it is proposed to establish here, if it is well supported, has plenty of funds, has ample scope, will be able to collect all the necessary information and to diffuse it without embarrassing the States which are without these bureaus at the present time or supporting those of their own. That may be so.

Mr. MORGAN. I am aware that the Senator from New Hampshire thinks that it is the highest duty of statesmanship in this country to wet-nurse the States.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator hardly needs to reply to his own argument by a sneer.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe the States are able to take care of themselves.

Mr. BLAIR. I think the Senator is hardly pursuing a line of argumentation consistent with the Senatorial character to reply by a sneer to an absolute and palpable controversion of his argument. The Senator must be more obtuse than we have found him—altogether more obtuse than we have found him—if he does not see that his analogies are farfetched, and that his argument is pretty thoroughly replied to by the suggestion of the existence of the Bureau of National Education. And so far as the education bill is concerned the Senator understands that it is based upon a supposed inability on the part of many States to maintain the necessary common-school system for a short period of time for the education of their people, and therefore that aid comes from the National Government. That is in no wise analogous to the ground upon which we place the bill before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not say it of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I can not speak in terms of proper respect, I believe, of that disposition to pry into the affairs of the people of the States of this Union which I find in vogue in some parts of the Senate Chamber, to force upon them views that are entertained here of what should be done by the people of the States to force upon them systems of education, systems of morality, systems of personal habits in respect of temperance and things of that kind, or of any sort, that may enter into the mind of a Senator which may induce him to suppose that he has the capacity by his vote and his legislative power to better the moral, and mental, and material condition of all the communities in this great country. That, sir, would be a herculean task for the greatest of intellects and the most experienced of statesmen. But those who know least of what other people are doing fancy always that they have the greatest power to correct the evils in their midst; and hence we find them springing up with new nostrums in politics for the purpose of making all others in the world better than they suppose them to be, for the purpose of trying to drill into them their ideas of morality and economy and propriety of conduct, and who are not satisfied with any class of any community in the world unless they can feel that they have been molded under their touch and formed exactly according to their wish.

The Senator from New Hampshire has signalized himself, distinguished himself in this effort to impress his personal views of universal improvement upon the people of the United States at large, and he has found sufficient support in the Senate of the United States, not to enable him to teach the children in the different States according to his method, but to enable him to come upon the Treasury of the United States to get money for the purpose of enabling the people, as he says, to educate themselves and to educate their own children. That is what I call wet-nursing the people of the States, and the Senator from New Hampshire is the head nurse in this department of intervention with affairs local and peculiar to the States themselves and to the different communities in this country. It may greatly redound to his honor and credit in time to come, but I think I can very well understand how the people of the United States will after a while arouse themselves to a proper comprehension of the idea that they are at least self-governing and self-controlling and self-educating.

This bill, as it is framed, is all of a piece with the other legislation upon like subjects. The object of it is to make inquiries broadcast in society among all classes of people in respect to their condition in every particular, not omitting their personal habits, their morals, their food and clothing, their social feelings and sentiments, their health, and their intelligence.

Letters have been read here for the purpose of informing the United States Senate as to what is its duty in legislating upon questions of morality and labor and propriety of conduct, and matters of that kind. These letters may be very instructive, but I would rather take the experience of any Senator in this body, I would rather take his information and his advice upon these questions, than the testimony of any number of letter-writers, especially when the letters come from those people who are all the time employing themselves with looking into other people's affairs, persons who are never happy unless they are prying into somebody's business, and who will stop at nothing in the world in order to find out what other people are doing, or thinking of, or caring for.

Prurient eagerness to invade the sanctity of home and family, that they may find something to gratify a depraved desire to open up the infirmities or misfortunes of other people, is a too common vice.

This inquisition (for it is intended to be nothing else) into the condition of all the laboring classes of this country reaches into the very sanctity of the homes of the land, and a man is liable to have himself called by name and the statistics of his family condition published to the world, whether creditable or discreditable to him, under the license and authority of Congress; that, too, sir, without respect to the question whether he has hired himself to another man or has been compelled to do it from necessity, or whether he is the master of his own domain and the controller of his own household.

The scope of the inquiry provided in this bill includes social and domestic matters that are not necessary to be known in order to enable us to legislate wisely for the people.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator yields the floor, I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 14, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEIFER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will be done. We desire to go on with the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The question being taken on Mr. KEIFER'S motion, the morning hour was dispensed with (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

CONTESTED ELECTION—ENGLISH VS. PEELLE.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to make a privileged report. I present the report of the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of English vs. Peelle, seventh Congressional district of Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Stanton J. Peelle was not elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congress from the seventh Congressional district of Indiana, and is not entitled to the seat he now holds.

Resolved, That William E. English was duly elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congress from the seventh Congressional district of Indiana, and is entitled to his seat.

Mr. CONVERSE. The minority desire also to present their views. I ask that they may be printed with the majority report.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire also to give notice that I will call up this case on Tuesday of next week.

CONTESTED ELECTION—WALLACE VS. M'KINLEY.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Wallace vs. McKinley, eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William McKinley, jr., was not elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Resolved, That Jonathan H. Wallace was elected a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, and is entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The report will be printed and laid over.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY], who is not in his seat, desires to submit a minority report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts will be permitted to present the views of the minority, and they will be printed with the report of the majority.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EDMUND WOLFE.

Mr. WELLER, in pursuance of leave previously given by the House, submitted views of the minority of the Committee on War Claims on the bill (H. R. 735) for the relief of Edmund Wolfe; which were ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. What bill does the committee indicate for consideration at this time?

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNES. I beg permission this morning, Mr. Chairman, to digress for a moment from the bill under consideration.

On the 17th day of January last I had the honor of introducing into the House of Representatives the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be, and is hereby, requested to report to the House a schedule containing as near as may be practicable all the items, articles, and commodities now subject to tariff duties which in its judgment are necessities or common comforts in the daily life and labor of the people of this country, to the end that all such items, articles, and commodities may be freed from all taxation or bounty not absolutely required to preserve the public credit of the United States.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Whatever consideration that committee may have given it, it is gratifying to know that the bill and schedules reported freed from all taxation or bounty several commodities now subject to duties which are necessities or common comforts in the daily life and labor of the people of this country, and that many hundreds of other items, articles, or commodities of like character were freed from taxation and bounty to the extent of one-fifth of the present tariff duties. If my constituents did not see in this bill all the reduction or relief they desired, they will at least accept the rejected work of the able and distinguished committee as a good beginning and an honest endeavor.

But it is not the tariff that we are called upon to consider to-day. We are out of that realm. We have passed beyond, while it slumbers. The music of war-tax reduction, horizontal or discriminating, has ceased. If not the taxes, the war-paint of the chieftains is off. The tomahawk and the scalping-knife lie buried side by side with the carhook. The bright face of business in this House is unveiled and resplendent, and every one feels himself wiser and better and more fraternal and loving because of our late seeming differences upon a great political and economic question.

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate you that the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, now under consideration, is devoid of politics. It involves only business propositions, relating to the diplomatic and consular service of the Government, similar in most respects to like propositions coming up for almost daily consideration and determination in every business organization and interest in this country. Once in each year the wholesale merchants deliberate and determine where they shall send their ministers and consuls, whom they will appoint, and at what salaries. The railroads, telegraphs, manufacturers, newspapers, and business men of every degree establish their legations and consulates, and regulate the salaries to be paid.

Unfortunately, this House has no voice in the establishment of legations or consulates, nor in the appointment of ministers or consuls. The President, with the other branch of Congress in secret session, make and unmake ministers and consuls at pleasure. The House is never consulted. The Senate is supreme. When, as it sometimes happens, the President and the Senate are thoroughly in accord, no political brother, however battered or worn, is a consular or diplomatic impossibility. Every pretense of a government affords an excuse for an envoy extraordinary or secretary of legation, and (unless the court language is English) an interpreter. Favorites when appointed, large salaries are demanded; these are followed by large "contingent expenses." Every town or village offers an excuse for the appointment of a consul, with salary and extra allowances for clerk-hire, rent of office, and time "awaiting instructions."

When once in office we all know their personal and political friends can not turn them out hungry upon the cold world, and will not so long as there is the semblance of propriety in any other course. Nor is it to be expected that there will be any equalization of salaries unless they are equalized by bringing up the salaries of the properly paid to those of the overpaid, rather than by reducing the salaries of the overpaid to a relative equality with the properly paid. There is but one way of correcting abuses in this service. The House, denied a voice in the appointment and qualification of consular and diplomatic officers, can only speak through its appropriation bill. Fortunately, when the fathers of the Constitution gave this exclusive power to the President and Senate they gave the House the power to appropriate money in accordance with its independent judgment. Your committee, after months of patient and laborious investigation and inquiry, have submitted their conscientious work for your action. It remains to be seen how far the majority will accept the advice and suggestions made in the bill or how much it will yield in advance to the dominating power over our consular and diplomatic service.

Diplomatic representatives are: First, envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary; second, ministers resident; third, ministers resident and consuls-general; fourth, chargés d'affaires. Under these four heads all our diplomatic servants proper are classified.

For sixty-five years after the establishment of this Government no representative of it at any foreign court received a greater salary than $9,000 per annum. During this period, I need scarcely say, and for this salary many of the ablest statesmen and most accomplished diplomates that this great country has ever produced represented it at the courts of Europe. They did not go to write books for sale, nor to seek rectorships in institutions of learning, nor to pander to the pride or "prejudices of the personnel of the governments to which they were accredited," but to represent the people of the Republic in plain republican simplicity, frankly and plainly demanding every right to which their country was entitled, and firmly and proudly protesting against every wrong attempted against it.

Now we have no envoy extraordinary at a less salary than $10,000, and four as high as $17,500 per annum. When to these salaries you add the cost of secretaries, the "contingent expenses" allowed them, and, in some cases, interpreters and other attachments, you find that the average cost of the first-class missions is over $25,000 per annum, with the second and third class increased proportionately.

In the consular service are, first, consuls-general, with salaries ranging from $2,000 to $6,000 per annum; second, consuls classified into seven classes, with salaries at $6,000, $5,000, $4,000, $3,500, $3,000, $2,500, $2,000, $1,500, and $1,000; third, consuls and commercial agents who receive no salary, but are allowed to keep the fees collected by them under certain restrictions.

It is worthy of observation that a consul who receives a salary of $1,000 is allowed to conduct and carry on any kind of business in which he may desire to engage, while he who receives a salary above that sum is prohibited from engaging in any kind of business.

With these general observations I will proceed to state specifically the changes in salaries made by this bill.

Of the envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary in the service of the United States, or authorized by any law, every one is provided for, and the bill appropriates the full amounts estimated by the honorable Secretary of State, with the following exceptions: The salaries of the ministers at Vienna and Rome are fixed at $10,000 each. This is a reduction of $2,000 from the salaries appropriated for the current year.

The salaries of the ministers to Chili and Peru are not reduced, but these representatives are accredited, respectively, as chargé d'affaires to Bolivia and Ecuador.

The salary of the minister to the United States of Colombia is increased beyond the current law to $10,000, in a proper effort to equalize the salaries of the several missions in the South and Central American States.

Of all our ministers resident not a salary is touched, changed, or reduced. To four of them and no more the function, powers, and duties of a consul-general are added. Two missions of this class have been abandoned, namely: Bolivia and Roumania, Greece and Servia.

The salary of the chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay is appropriated without reduction or change.

Of the salaries of secretaries of legation, no change is made, except in Austria, Japan, China, Spain, and Central American States. The first is reduced from $1,800 to $1,500; the second from $2,500 to $1,800, and the third from $3,000 to $1,800. Spain is increased from $1,200 to $1,800, and the Central American States from $1,000 to $1,500.

In addition to the above, the bill appropriates for four new secretaries of legation, at $1,500 each, giving one to each of the following legations: In Chili, Italy, Peru, and United States of Colombia.

Second secretaries of legation are provided for at London, Paris, and Berlin at $1,800 each, a reduction of $200 from each, while second secretaries for China and Japan are added at a salary of $1,800 each.

Interpreters to legations in Japan, China, and Turkey are allowed at a salary for each of $2,500. This simply reduces China and Turkey to the same rate provided by current law for Japan.

In the consulates-general only the following changes have been made: Melbourne, from $4,500 to $4,000; Montreal, from $4,000 to $3,000; Saint Petersburg, from $3,000 to $2,000; Constantinople, from $3,500 to $2,000; Rome, from $3,500 to $2,000; Vienna, from $3,500 to $3,000; Halifax, from $3,000 to $2,000.

The following new consulates-general have been appropriated for: Panama, Bucharest; the former at $4,000 and the latter at $3,000.

The consulates-general at Cairo and Madrid have been abandoned or dropped.

CONSULS.

In this bill the following consulates have been dropped: Honolulu, $4,000; Apia, $3,000; Brussels, $2,500; Coaticook, $2,000; Port Louis, $2,000; Tangier, $2,000; Mahé, $1,500; Copenhagen, $1,500; Malta, $1,500; Gaspé Basin, $1,000; Sabanilla, $1,000; Stettin, $1,000; Mozambique, $1,000; commercial agency at St. Paul de Loando, $1,000; commercial agency at Levuka, $1,000; commercial agency at Gaboon, $1,000; commercial agency at San Juan del Norte, $1,000.

The following reductions have been made in the appropriations for consulates: At Foochow, salary reduced from $3,500 to $3,000; Hankow, from $3,500 to 3,000; Tien-Tsin, from $3,500 to $3,000; Chin-Kiang, from $3,500 to $3,000; Ningpo, from $3,500 to $3,000; Callao, from $3,500 to $2,500; Santiago de Cuba, from $2,500 to $2,000; Cork, from $2,000 to $1,500; Odessa, from $2,000 to $1,500; Tamatave, from $2,000 to $1,500; Beirut, from $2,000 to $1,500; Hamilton, from $2,000 to $1,500; Bristol, from $1,500 to $1,000; Gibraltar, from $1,500 to $1,000; St. Helena, from $1,500 to $1,000; Port Stanley, from $1,500 to $1,000; Clifton, from $1,500 to $1,000; Pictou, from $1,500 to $1,000; Goderich, from $1,500 to $1,000; Southampton, from $1,500 to $1,000; Ceylon, from $1,500 to $1,000; Antigua, from $1,500 to $1,000; St. Stephen's, from $1,500 to $1,000; Nice, from $1,500 to $1,000; Barcelona, from $1,500 to $1,000; Fayal, from $1,500 to $1,000; Funchal, from $1,500 to $1,000; Jerusalem, from $1,500 to $1,000.

The salaries for the following consulates have been increased, and new consulates authorized, with salaries as follows: Hong Kong, increased from $4,000 to $5,000; Athens, new, $2,500; Sagua la Grande, new, $2,000; La Paz, new, $2,000; Cairo, new, $2,000; Paso del Norte, new, $1,500; Tegucigalpa, new, $1,500; Santiago de Guatemala, new, $1,500; San José, new, $1,500; Managua, new, $1,500; San Salvador, new, $1,500; Asuncion, new, $1,500; Ghent, new, $1,000.

Having now presented to the committee a plain and reliable statement of every change made in the salaries of envoys, ministers, and consuls, I suppose it will be deemed more appropriate to withhold the discussion of the remaining specific items of appropriation until the bill is read by sections. For a like reason it will not be expected or desired that I should give now the reasons that influenced the committee to make the changes I have just enumerated.

Declaring the entire absence of all political or partisan prejudices and of every element of desire for mere party advantage, the committee have a right to expect that the honorable gentlemen who support the estimates as they came from the Department of State will meet them on plain business propositions, with the practical fairness of business men intent on justice as well to the people who supply our revenues as to the officials who expend them.

It no doubt occurred to the fathers of the Constitution that the time might come when the President and the Senate would be in political accord, and unable by reason of fraternal obligations to dislodge from sinecure positions unnecessary or cumulative officials or employés. Hence the power given to the House in the regulation of the salaries of such officials. If the President find himself unable or if he be unwilling to remove from the service an unfaithful minister or consul, or if the State Department, by favoritism to one and injustice to another, demoralize the foreign service, the House will and ought to interpose its prerogatives, and by withdrawing the salaries compel the discharge of worthless or incompetent men.

In general, I am authorized to say that if the Committee on Appropriations have sought to be economical, as was their bounden duty, they have avoided parsimony. If they have frowned upon the negligent and unfaithful public servant, they have encouraged the efficient and rewarded the honest. Where they have decreased expenses or reduced salaries they found good reason for their action. Where they have increased salaries or allowance for expenses they anticipate no criticism or objection on the part of the Department.

Many of the most experienced and able statesmen of the House have expressed opinions in favor of the abolition of our entire system of diplomatic representation at foreign courts, and if we are to accept as true the statements of the honorable Secretary of State in regard to the duties of a minister, then the sooner it is done the better.

In his letter to the President, transmitted by the latter immediately after this bill was reported to the House, the Secretary says:

> But there can be no frankness or confidence without acquaintance, and acquaintance is only to be gained by association with those who control the public business; these the minister must seek in that rank of life in which they move. Having earned the trust and respect of those with whom he must officially associate, he is prepared to fulfill his duty to his Government by studying the sensibilities, the prejudices, the form of government, and the personnel of the administration of the country in which he officially resides.

Is it possible that there can be no frankness with a stranger? Must we conceal the truth from our neighbor until we get acquainted with him and have studied his sensibilities and prejudices? But, giving the observation a national application, must this great Republic withhold frankness and confidence from any other government until some minister has earned the trust and respect of those who administer it and studied "the sensibilities and prejudices of the personnel of the administration?" No reliance is placed in the power, the greatness, or the glory of our country or its flag; no reliance in frankness or plain speech; none in the absolute justice of our demands—and we should make no others. The reliance is upon the minister, upon his ability to study aright "the sensibilities and prejudices of the personnel of the administration." Through the senses and the prejudices of men in authority, our minister, by subtle artfulness in association, is expected to secure the rights of the great Republic of the earth!

So when great public rights are at stake, when the lives and the property of our citizens are in peril abroad, as was the case in England last winter, our minister must not throw into the scale the power or renown of the American name, nor the simple power of frankness, justice, and truth, but he must depend upon his powers of personal blandishment and his understanding of the tastes and prejudices of the personnel of the government to which he is accredited. No wonder now that our national demands have been laughed at and despised! No wonder that the lives of American citizens and soldiers have been hurriedly and contemptuously sacrificed by foreign powers in defiance of our respectful but feeble protests. The minister had not ministered successfully to the sensibilities nor aptly studied "the prejudices of the personnel of the government." The poor victims of foreign hate and tyranny in their last dread moment of trial and death fondly supposed that the flag of the Union had been powerless to save them, when in fact its influence had not been invoked nor its power interposed.

In another place the Secretary, in his letter to the President, says:

> Diplomatic and consular representatives are sent abroad primarily for the advantage of the United States, although the element of courtesy and international friendship should not be overlooked. This being so, a wise policy would seem to dictate, unless some question of principle is involved, a regard to the sensibilities, traditions, or prejudices of the people among whom they are to live and whose good will it is important to secure. This is one argument against the union of the two functions of diplomatic and consular officers, as such an arrangement is looked upon with disfavor by many governments, and by some is regarded, whether properly or not, as evincing a lack of esteem.

Again:

> The two offices are incompatible. They are as different as the two professions of law and medicine.

Here we have the suggestion of the State Department that this House must have regard to the sensibilities, the traditions, and prejudices of the people among whom the minister lives. Before, only the minister was to minister to the senses, passions, and prejudices of the personnel of the government, but here we are advised that we, the representatives of the people, should shape our legislation "with regard to the traditions, sensibilities, and prejudices of the people among whom our ministers live." The tastes and prejudices of the petty provinces of Europe, Asia, and Africa must have legislative as well as diplomatic recognition! The diplomatic and consular function must not be lodged in the same person, because of the high-born prejudices of an effete or crumbling dynasty. The tradesman engaged in commercial pursuits, the consul, companion of our business men, must not be allowed by our law to lay under the sensitive nose of a petty prince a message from the State Department of this great Government.

The suggestion is an insult and an outrage. It would have us say to foreign governments, we recognize in our legislation and respect your prejudices against men who labor in any commercial or business pursuit. We will not send into your delicate presence a minister who is tainted by a consular obligation to his Government, but will establish caste in our diplomatic service against the very genius of our republican institutions.

But there is another answer to the present position of the Secretary against the union of the diplomatic and consular function in the same person. It ought to be conclusive. The joining of the two functions under the title of minister resident and consul-general has been sanctioned by long-established precedents, and followed by every Republican administration since 1860.

But that is not all. Secretary Frelinghuysen himself, in his annual report of estimates made to this Congress for us, recommended the union of the diplomatic and consular functions in the same person. With only four exceptions he recommended every one of the ministers resident and consuls-general named in the bill. Let me call your attention to Executive Document No. 5, Forty-eighth Congress, page 207. This is the recommendation of the State Department upon which the bill is based. See now, while I read, the difference between the official recommendation of the Secretary at the beginning of this session of Congress and his latter-day utterances to the President after he had read the bill of the committee: "Minister resident and consul-general to Bolivia. Ministers resident and consuls-general to Liberia, Switzerland, Denmark, Portugal, Siam, Persia, Hayti." But this is not all: "Minister resident and consuls-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece."

Here I leave the honorable Secretary on this important proposition. He is in antagonism to himself. It is his speech, hurriedly hurled into this House through the President, versus his official recommendations in pursuance of law. He has united the two professions of law and medicine in the same person. He has practiced both on this House.

It was suggested to the committee by gentlemen eminent in statesmanship and diplomacy, and whose opinions were fortified by extensive foreign travel and observation, that the great majority of our foreign missions ought to be abolished entirely. Austria and Italy were especially named as countries with which it was worse than useless to maintain other than consular relations. We have no possible interests there needing diplomatic attention. No claims are pending needing argument or the personal efforts of a minister to reach the senses or "study the prejudices of the personnel of the government." In the event of revolution or dismemberment we seek no territorial aggrandizement, no harbor of refuge or expansion; no entangling alliance with any departing or coming government.

Although our export trade with each country is decreasing, and so many good reasons exist for abandoning diplomatic representation at Vienna and Rome, the committee have continued the appropriations for the service. Complaint has been made that $10,000 per annum is not enough for the payment of the envoys to these two courts. It is the same salary paid to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is $2,000 more than the salary of the Secretary of State or any other Cabinet officer. But it will be urged that these ministers have to entertain guests and give expensive dinners. Are judges of the Supreme Court and members of the Cabinet exempt from the pleasures and expenses of hospitality? It is claimed that ministers have to extend expensive courtesies to Americans traveling in Austria and Italy. Why? Is not courtesy voluntary and reciprocal? And why should the many at home be taxed for the social pleasures of the few traveling abroad? After all, do not $10,000 make a very respectable salary? It is double the pay of each Senator and member of Congress, and is accompanied by the allowance of several thousand dollars more for contingent expenses and the like.

Sir, I am well aware of the disadvantage under which any member labors who attempts to curtail the unreasonable expenditures of a Department that can interpose against every reform the social influence of productive courtesy, the personal influences of personal friends, and the courtly blandishments of a pampered life; but justice and duty to our confiding constituencies require that, at whatever personal sacrifices, we should make an honest effort to reform abuses in the public service and keep appropriations and expenses within the bounds of democratic simplicity.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the Committee of the Whole will give me its attention I hope not to occupy more than twenty or twenty-five minutes. I shall confine myself to the bill before the committee, endeavoring to explain its provisions; and I think the committee can profitably give me its attention for the reason that no man in this House who has not sat down and given at least a day's consideration to this bill by close comparison with the law and with previous bills can tell anything about it.

I have listened with interest to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], but I have been surprised to find that he occupied his hour in speaking in the main about the least material matters in the bill, while on the most material matters, in regard to which in my judgment the Committee on Appropriations has in proposing this bill been guilty of sins both of omission and commission, he has been substantially silent.

Now, coming at once to the bill, I have abstracted the same, and ask the attention of the committee while I make a comparison of the service under existing appropriations made by the last Congress and what it will be under this bill if enacted into law. I hold in my hand a tabular statement as follows:

Items of appropriation.	For service— As it now exists, 1884.	For service— As proposed by bill, 1885.
Contingent foreign intercourse and missions abroad	$85,000	$15,500
Chargés d'affaires and diplomatic officers abroad	20,000	(a)
Salaries to consular officers not citizens	10,000	(a)
Clerks of consulates	66,500	37,000
For interpreters	19,000	5,000
Contingent and rent for consulates	110,000	84,000
Expenses of prisons and prisoners	22,600	8,950
Relief of American seamen	50,000	40,000
Expenses executing neutrality act	10,000	(a)
Expenses discharging American seamen	6,000	(a)
Total	399,100	190,450

a No appropriation.

On these items the proposed reduction is $208,650.

Now let us take the first item for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse. The law for the present service is as follows:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper, and of all the missions abroad, $85,000.

While this bill (page 14) is as follows:

For the purpose of enabling the President to provide at the public expense all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, $15,500.

It will be noticed the law is general in its nature and includes all necessary expenses, while under the terms of the bill no expenditure can be made save for the specific items mentioned. I called upon the Secretary of State for a statement as to the expenditure of this contingent fund for the year 1883, and send the same to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses foreign missions for 1883.

*Rent	$13,129 14
*Postage	9,607 33
*Stationery	14,744 18
*Telegrams	6,911 45
*Furniture	3,606 66
*Traveling expenses	2,836 83
*Secret service	1,582 91
*Coronation expenses at Moscow	3,000 00
*Loss by exchange	1,662 83
Miscellaneous expenses	5,003 92
Disbursements by Department of State, as per House Executive Document 43, Forty-eighth Congress, first session	10,320 03
Disbursements by Department of State since preparation of above document	6,787 02
	79,132 30
Balance	5,867 70

Mr. CANNON. The items marked with a star, and among which are rent, postage, telegrams, and secret service, aggregating over $47,000, are not included generally or specially in the bill now being considered, and it is deliberately proposed that they shall not be appropriated for; and at one stroke of the pen this contingent fund is stricken down from $85,000 to $15,500. If this bill is enacted into law we will send our foreign ministers abroad and they will have no money with which to rent an office. Grave complications may arise requiring our diplomatic agents to communicate with the President or Secretary of State, and there will not be one cent of money with which to pay official postage or the expense of a telegram or cablegram.

The gentleman from Missouri spoke of the late troubles which some of our naturalized citizens in Great Britain have had in the last year or so. If the law had been as he claims it shall be by this bill, it would have been out of the power of our diplomatic representatives to have sent or received telegrams from the Department of State.

Does my friend propose when rights of naturalized citizens of this country or of native-born citizens are in jeopardy in Europe or elsewhere throughout the world we shall have the representative of the Government present, but there shall be no sum of money given for the purpose of communicating rapidly by steam or on the wings of the lightning with the home government? Yet that is the effect of this bill. Instead of $85,000 being provided for the contingent expenses of the Department, as has been customary in preceding diplomatic appropriation bills, there is only provided in the pending measure an appropriation of $15,500.

More than that, sir; you place it out of the power of the Department of State to confer by telegram or even by letter with our representatives abroad unless the Secretary of State, out of his pocket, should pay the postage on the letters or the cost of the telegrams when he desires to reach our ministers or consuls scattered over the surface of the earth.

And this same thing, Mr. Chairman, is true of the consular service. Now, where does the gentleman get his authority for cutting down this appropriation? He goes back to 1856, and he finds a section of the statute which provides as follows:

The President is authorized to provide at the public expense all such stationery, blanks, records and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs, as he shall think necessary for the several legations, consulates, and commercial agencies in the transaction of business.

I undertake to say even at the very time that statute was passed up to the present it has not been strictly construed, and that when Congress came to make appropriations they made it substantially in the language of the present law, which is as follows:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and all the missions abroad, $85,000.

And that is the language in which this appropriation ought now to be presented. Then everything which falls under the head of contingent expenses would be under the discretion of the Secretary of State as it is at present. If the Secretary of State should abuse the discretion reposed in him by Congress, we have the power to correct such abuse by legislation. Or if he should willfully violate the law, we have the power of impeachment. Above all there is the great power of public opinion in this country, the public opinion of 55,000,000 people, which at all times restrains all officers of the Government and all political parties.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the law does not cover it now, we can amend it in this bill and provide hereafter that it shall be so.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I go back to the year 1856, and I say that from then until now this appropriation for the contingent expenses of the State Department has been made substantially from year to year as I have recited it.

Let me next come to some other items which are affected by the pending bill. The Committee on Appropriations dropped out altogether the item of $20,000 for chargés d'affaires. That I understand to be a fund which is provided for the payment of secretaries of legation when performing the duties of ministers during the absence of their chief.

They are entitled to half the amount that we pay the minister or that the minister receives when he is present performing the duties of that office. Take, for instance, our representative at Berlin. There is at present nobody there but the secretary of legation. He is in charge of the affairs at that important point. He is acting as our minister, and yet his salary is $2,600 per annum only, though he may continue to act in that capacity for some time subject to the greater responsibility and increased expense. Now, my friend from Missouri would place it out of the power of the Secretary of State to allow him one-half of the compensation which we would pay to a minister if one was there.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the next item to which I shall call attention is the clerks at consulates. The present law appropriates $66,000 for that purpose. The bill here gives but $37,000. I think that is wrong. I could go into the reasons, but must hasten on, reserving to myself the right to do so under the five-minute debate.

For interpreters the present law appropriates $19,000, and that sum has been substantially provided for years. This bill gives the paltry sum of $5,000. Why send your ministers and consuls abroad at all if they are to be helpless? You send them to Japan and China and Turkey and to all the nations of the earth, and when they are there you do not propose by this bill that they shall have the interpreters to enable them to utilize their positions and knowledge as representatives of the interests of this Government in communicating with the people who speak a different language. You had better keep them at home altogether if you do not give them the tools with which to work. And why do you do this? You do it for the purpose of saving to the people of this country the difference between $19,000 and $5,000, a paltry sum of $14,000, and yet you jeopardize the interests belonging to 56,000,000 of prosperous people. You do this that you may claim to be economical in your expenditures!

But now let me go to the next item, the expenses of prisons and prisoners. Twenty-two thousand six hundred dollars is the current law, and you cut it down to $8,950. Why, do gentlemen understand that under our treaties with many of the Oriental countries our consuls hold courts, settling matters between our citizens and those of other countries, having civil as well as criminal jurisdiction, and that we can not perform our duty under treaties or to our citizens without prisons in which to confine those who violate the law? And yet this bill proposes to reduce the expenditure for this purpose from $22,600 to $8,950.

The next item is for the relief of American seamen. The law now provides $50,000; this bill reduces it to $40,000. Under the law he is entitled to certain protection and relief in case of shipwreck. Some years less than $50,000 is spent for this purpose, but it is not safe to appropriate less than that amount. Some years ago the whole of this amount was spent at one port in less than a month, and we may have severe shipwrecks again. It is not safe to decrease this appropriation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment to state that under the bill already passed, and in connection with this subject, the expenditures for American seamen abroad will be considerably increased this year, because expenses previously borne by the vessels will be borne hereafter by the Government? So the appropriation of $40,000 would not be enough.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is on the assumption that that bill will pass.

Mr. BURNES. I beg to say, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, that the appropriation of last year was $50,000 and the expenditures $30,000. In consequence of $30,000 only being spent last year the committee reduced it to $40,000, giving $10,000 more than the expenditures of last year, and believe that to be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that to be the case, and that the Committee on Appropriations—and I am a member of the committee—is a powerful committee and remarkably smart and shrewd. I have no doubt that it can come about as near predicting the number of storms we are to have next year as the great Wiggins. [Laughter.] Now, if this appropriation is not necessary it need not be expended; but do not cut it down, as it may be needed.

So much for that. I will not go over these items further. This bill recommends $366,875 less than the estimates. It recommends $318,385 less than the law for this year. All of that $318,000 substantially is included in these items to which I have called your attention with the exception of $75,000 for the American Claims Commission, which is no longer required, as that commission has finished its work.

If I understood my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] aright he intimated that he feared some criticisms would be made on account of the alleged cheese-paring. Oh, no! I do not care much about the cheese-paring in this bill. There is some cheese-paring in it. My friend talked during his hour nearly all the time about the cheese-paring in the bill. I am not so very particular about that. But in these other matters covering $208,000 in the items I have spoken of there is not cheese-paring—they cut to the blood and the bone, ay, to the very heart of the diplomatic service. You will not get me on the cheese-paring proposition. Gentlemen are welcome to the dress-parade that comes from that if they want it. But when they come deliberately to roll back the record this Congress has made for twenty years under Republican and under Democratic rule, even the record made in the Forty-fourth Congress, and propose to render useless the already weak arm of the diplomatic service of this Government, I must protest and protest upon the merits.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me a question?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. STRUBLE. I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], while setting forth the proposed reduction, to state that there had been some increase made in certain respects. I rose at one time with a view to ask him a question upon that point. Does the gentleman from Illinois know anything about the matter of increase?

Mr. CANNON. I know all about it and will speak of that.

Mr. STRUBLE. I should like to know something about it.

Mr. CANNON. I wanted first to discuss the most material matters in this bill, the matters that involve the efficiency and very life of this service, before speaking of other matters. In other words, if I have serious work to do I want to get the serious work off my hands and am then ready for the matters of less importance.

There is one other item I must refer to, the expenses of executing the neutrality act, $10,000. That appropriation has stood in the diplomatic appropriation bill time out of mind. Now, what is it? It is made in pursuance of section 216 of the Revised Statutes. What is it used for? It is the confidential secret fund of the Secretary of State. Sometimes it is not used. Last year I believe it was not used at all.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Is that cut out?

Mr. CANNON. It is cut out entirely, root and branch. Last year very little of that appropriation was used. Yet when gentlemen recollect we are here, fifty-six millions strong, with our extended coast; when they recollect our varied interests; when they recollect the population we have, native, foreign and naturalized; when they recollect the delicate questions that must arise in the position we occupy, I think the good sense of this House will see that the Secretary of State should at least have the $10,000 that he has had for many years as a confidential fund upon which he may draw and upon which he will not draw unless it is necessary so to do

My friend from Iowa asked me about the increases. I am going to surprise my friend. First, take the decrease of offices and salaries made by the bill and then take the increase and strike a balance, and how much do you suppose it is?

Mr. STRUBLE. I have no idea; I want information on that point.

Mr. CANNON. The bill saves just $25,100 when you come to add it up and strike the balance. In other words, take all the cutting of salaries, the abolition of consulates, the providing of additional consuls, the increase of salaries, and when you come to make up the account, while this bill is $318,000 less than the law for the current year, there is only $25,100 of it made up by the changes specified, and about which my friend from Missouri talked for his whole hour. Probably you would like me to state the account. I can do it very briefly. Perhaps I ought to do so, because I have examined this bill with some care. There are two ministers that have not been provided for; their salaries amount to $11,500.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. What ministers are they?

Mr. CANNON. The minister to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, and the minister to Bolivia, There are twenty-one consulates abolished, wiped out. The aggregate paid those twenty-one consuls is $31,500. I read the list, as follows:

Consul-general to Madrid, $3,000; consul at Apia, $3,000: consul at Honolulu, $4,000; consul at Brussels, $2,500; consuls at Coaticook. Port Louis, and Tangier, at $2,000 each; consuls at Mahé, Malta, Copenhagen, and Gaspé Basin, at $1,500 each; consuls at Mozambique, Stettin, Sabanilla, and Saint Paul de Loando, at $1,000 each; consul at Levuka, $1,000; consul at Gaboon, $1,000; consul at San Juan del Norte, $1,000.

The salaries of two envoys extraordinary have been reduced, namely: Austria, from $12,000 to $10,000; Italy, from $12,000 to $10,000.

The salaries of three secretaries of legation have been reduced, namely: Secretary of legation to Japan from $2,500 to $1,800, secretary of legation to China from $2,500 to $1,800, second secretary of legation to Berlin from $2,000 to $1,800.

I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the second secretary of legation at Berlin is the son of a former Senator from Kentucky, Senator Crittenden. He is not a Republican in politics, and was sent to Berlin many years ago by President Grant. He is noted at home and abroad for his ability, and has filled the position he now occupies with satisfaction to all. He has received the modest pay of $2,000 a year. The proposition now is to come in for the purpose of economy and lay the strong arm of 55,000,000 of people on the second secretary of legation at Berlin and cut $200 a year from his salary.

Mr. REED. That is a saving of about $16 a month.

Mr. CANNON. But to go on.

The interpreter at the Turkish legation is reduced from $3,000 to $2,500; consul-general at Melbourne from $4,500 to $4,000; consul-general at Montreal from $4,000 to $3,000; consul-general at Constantinople and consul-general at Halifax from $3,500 to $2,000 each.

Twenty-seven consuls have thus far been reduced in the aggregate $13,500, as follows: Foochow, Hankow, Tien-Tsin, Chin Kiang, and Ningpo, from $3,500 to $3,000 each; Callao, from $3,500 to $2,500; Santiago de Cuba and Saint Thomas, from $2,500 to $2,000 each; Cork, Hamilton, and Tamatave, from $2,000 to $1,500 each; Beirut, from $2,500 to $1,500; Bristol, Saint Helena, Port Stanley, Clifton, Pictou, Gooderich, Southampton, Ceylon, Antigua, Saint Stephen's, Nice, Barcelona, Fayal, Funchal, and Jerusalem, from $1,500 to $1,000 each.

The abolition of these offices and the reduction of salaries aggregate $63,100.

The following officers have their salaries increased as noted by the bill: Ministers to United States of Colombia, from $7,500 to $10,000; secretary of legation in Spain, from $1,200 to $1,800; secretary of legation in Central American States, from $1,000 to $1,500; consul-general at Panama, from $3,000 to $4,000; consul-general at Hong-Kong, from $4,000 to $5,000.

The following officers are created by this bill with compensation as noted: Secretary of legation in Italy, in Chili, in Peru, and in United States of Colombia, $1,500 each; second secretaries of legation in China and in Japan, to acquire language, $1,800 each; consul-general at Bucharest, $3,000; consul at Athens, Greece, $2,500; consuls at Sagua la Grande, La Paz (Bolivia), and at Cairo (Turkish Dominions), $2,000 each; consuls at El Paso del Norte, at Tegucigalpa, at Santiago de Gautemala, at San José, at Managua, at San Salvador, at Ascension, $1,500; consul at Ghent, $1,000.

The increase of offices and salaries aggregate an annual sum of $38,000. Therefore I say again that when you come to foot up the account, after you have rendered unhappy on the one hand fifty-eight people, and on the other hand have perhaps rendered happy twenty-four people—when you come to even it up there is a net saving of $25,100 a year.

Now I want to talk on this subject a minute on its merits. I undertake to say, with all due respect to my friend, who has given great attention to this bill, that in rearranging these salaries he has started upon a wrong basis and proceeds upon a wrong theory. If that be true, then his conclusion must necessarily be incorrect.

He told us in his concluding remarks that he had due regard to the amount of money that was earned at these consulates; that is to say, the fees they collect annually which go into the United States Treasury. If they collect a large amount, then he would increase their pay; if a small amount, then he would decrease their pay. Now, I undertake to say that is not the way we should regulate this service. The primary object of our consular service is not to collect revenue by fees.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Still they collect more than we pay them.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, that is true. They collect, as I recollect, in round numbers nearly a million of dollars, which is $50,000 more than enough to pay every expenditure in connection with the consular service, including the contingent expenses and every other.

Mr. Chairman, the object of the consular service and the duties of consuls are so much more clearly set out by the Secretary of State in Executive Document No. 146, that I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read in part as I have marked. It will be seen that the fees collected by consuls are a very poor indication of the importance of the consulates.

The Clerk read as follows:

A nation of 56,000,000 inhabitants can never cease to be an important factor in public affairs, and when that nation is wealthy even out of proportion to its vast population; when it pushes its enormous natural products into every country, underselling the local market, and is increasing its exports of manufactured goods until they are found in all parts of the earth, competing with the long-established factories of Europe, it can not expect to hold aloof from the rest of the world, and can not consider itself isolated either politically or commercially. During the year 1883 the United States exported $629,224,000 of raw material, and $175,000,000 of manufactured goods. That this invasion of foreign markets, there to compete with their domestic products and manufactures, is not patiently regarded by foreign nations recent events familiar to all have shown. There are, besides, political considerations, arising from our form of government and political principles, as well as the vast number of emigrants annually flocking to our shores, which should not be lost sight of in this connection. Events in this continent also require constant attention and a careful policy to avoid on the one hand entangling alliances or undesirable acquisitions, and on the other any infringement upon a political doctrine which has always been cherished by the people of this country.

With an unprotected coast, without an effective navy, with a population energetic in commerce and fond of travel, pushing themselves into all countries for purposes of trade, pleasure, or instruction, or as missionaries pursuing their self-sacrificing labors among a hostile population; with a national and necessary policy forbidding European political intervention on this continent, with a system of government regarded by many other countries with disfavor, and with a production greater than we can consume, which must seek foreign markets, it is vitally important to sustain a sufficient and well-compensated diplomatic and consular service. This public service is now seriously hampered by lack of funds, although the former branch costs very much less than that of any other first-class power, while the latter is more than self-sustaining.

The duties of consular officers are—

First. To aid and protect their fellow-citizens.

Second. To settle disputes between masters and seamen of American vessels; to ship and discharge the crews; to care for sick and disabled seamen, and generally to guard American shipping interests.

Third. To aid in the extension of our trade by protecting it where it exists, by seeking new markets, and by furnishing American merchants with early, correct, and useful information.

Fourth. To protect the revenue of the United States, examining into the truthfulness of statements contained in the invoices presented to them for certification of goods to be imported into this country, and by giving the customs officers early information of facts of importance to them.

Besides these general duties, consuls in some countries have by treaty extra-territorial powers of hearing, as judges, civil causes wherein their countrymen are defendants, and trying them when accused of crime. In several countries the consul participates in the municipal government of the foreign colony at his post, and at some he acts as United States postmaster.

For example, at Shanghai the consul-general has the following duties: First. He has supervisory control over all consulates in China. Second. Because of the distance from the legation at Peking, the insufficient means of communication, especially in winter, and the peculiar powers of the local government, he has often important semi-diplomatic duties to perform, requiring delicacy and tact. Third. With the other consular representatives he participates in the municipal government of the foreign settlement with a very considerable population and containing much valuable property, both real and personal. Fourth. He is a judge trying civil causes in which Americans are defendants, and trying them for crimes sometimes carrying the extreme penalty of the law. He also has charge of the jail in which American prisoners are confined. In his judicial capacity he is judge of a criminal court, of a court of probate and divorce, of an equity, and of a nisi-prius court. Fifth. He is a United States postmaster, handling all the mails arriving at Shanghai for citizens of this country, either officials or private individuals. Sixth. He performs the duties of a seaport consulate, namely, has care of American shipping, guarding the interests of master, crew, and owners; he protects the revenue of his Government and watches and strives to increase the export trade.

The fees at such a post can not, and in the very nature of things should not, be sufficient to pay the expenses of the office, combining as it does judicial, municipal, executive, and commercial functions.

On the other hand, the consulates in Europe have less important duties, especially those in the interior, where the consul has none but duties relating to the collection of the revenue to perform. For such duties the fee returns are usually large, and while the services rendered are important and are very conscientiously performed by the present officers, they do not require that education, training, and knowledge of law and diplomatic precedents necessary at a post where a consul is at once a judge and in some sense a mayor as well as a consul.

Mr. CANNON. Before I speak further touching this matter I want to call attention, merely by way of sample, to one or two consulates which have been dropped or the salaries of which have been decreased. Take Apia. I turn to page 37 of this report and I read:

Our commercial relations with the Samoan Islands are at present, though perhaps not large, rapidly extending, and from the position of the islands it is thought that with proper fostering the greater part of the trade may be diverted to the United States. The principal products of the islands are cobra, cocoanut, coral, sharks' fins, &c., while they import from us lumber, provisions, dry goods, &c. The efforts of our consuls in these islands have already resulted in greatly increasing our trade, and the prospect of a further increase is very promising. Besides his commercial duties, the consul at Apia is charged with certain political, judicial, and municipal duties, which are necessary for the proper protection of the American residents. The cost of living in Samoa is very high, and the salary of the principal officer at least should be sufficient for his support, as he is not allowed, and should not be allowed, to engage in business pursuits. It is recommended that offices be retained at Apia, Pago-Pago, and Jaluit, as follows:

Then follows the recommendation of $3,500 as salary of consul-general at Apia.

This is the only representative that the United States Government has at Apia; yet it is deliberately proposed in this bill to wipe out of existence that consulate. Why? Because last year he did not collect any considerable amount of fees. In other words, when the trade of the United States is established and a consul is not so important, increase his salary; but where the United States is seeking to establish a trade and a consul is needed to assist, and is absolutely necessary, the policy of this bill is to dispense with his services.

Take another illustration—Constantinople. The salary of the consul-general at Constantinople is $3,500. This bill proposes to cut him down to $2,000. Why, sir, do gentlemen recollect that the consul-general there supervises several other consuls? Do they recollect that he is secretary of legation for our minister there? Do they recollect that he is presiding judge at the consular court, which under our treaty is the only court that can afford protection to the personal rights and the property of American citizens when abroad in the dominions of Turkey? Yet you propose to heap these duties upon him while you take from his salary $1,500, cutting it down to $2,000.

Why, sir, the man who stands at one of the doors of this House receives in round numbers $1,500. We pay a Department clerk here in Washington, who goes to work at 9 o'clock in the morning and stops at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, who has no duties to perform except to manage his pen for seven hours, who has nobody dependent upon him in the performance of his duty except under the direction of his superior, to such a man here in Washington, where living is comparatively cheap, we pay $1,200 to $1,800 a year. Yet we propose to say to these men, "Go to your official post anywhere around the world at your own expense, we allow you no traveling expenses; go to the ends of the earth, and pay your own transportation and your own board bills; return in the same way; and when you are abroad conform to the customs of the country; make yourselves respectable in the consular service and in the diplomatic service along with other people in that rank or station of life; relieve the shipwrecked seamen; attend to the duties of your station and afford protection to the naturalized and native-born citizens of the United States who may apply to you; and when all this is done—after performing all these duties and paying all these expenses; after you have held court, as at Constantinople, determining rights of property, of liberty, of life, where American citizens are contestants; after requiring of you these duties; after compelling you to bear these expenses—we propose to take $1,500 from the inadequate salary you now get." I undertake to say that such action is not wise, and should not and will not meet with approval of that people gentlemen claim to be so desirous of serving.

I wish to make one remark in closing. I send this report to the Clerk of the House to be read, and I want it read in full.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 6770:

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1885, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates upon which the bill is based are to be found on pages 207 to 212, inclusive, of the Book of Estimates, and aggregate in all, not including the sum of $224,556.75 which was submitted for the survey of the international boundary between the United States and Mexico, $1,345,045, of which sum the committee recommend $978,170, being a reduction under the estimates of $366,875, and a reduction under the amount appropriated by the law for the current year of $318,385.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to revolutionize the diplomatic service of the United States upon the recommendation of a committee not charged with matters of legislation touching it, and when the bill is reported and the report is read it is found not to cover a dozen lines. Having due regard for the great industry and ability of my colleague on the committee the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] I submit to him and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that no man in three months' investigation can obtain knowledge sufficient of the diplomatic and consular service of the United States as it reaches out to fifteen hundred millions of people all over the face of the earth to enable him to come in and present a measure which shall revolutionize that service. And I trust that this committee and the House of Representatives will not in sheer madness blindly undertake to run a muck in the enactment of this bill.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Chairman, a large part of this session of Congress has been occupied in discussing general appropriation bills, and I have yet to hear coming from the other side of the House a single proposition to reduce the appropriations reported by the committee. On the contrary, from the beginning of the session to the present hour the time has been spent in efforts to increase appropriations as recommended by the committee. I hear some gentleman say, why not? I know of no particular reason.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit the gentleman who made that observation to finish it?

Mr. FOLLETT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I said, why not? This is a growing country. It costs more to run it every year.

Mr. FOLLETT. I am not talking, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the growth of the country. I simply said the appropriation bills recommended by the committee this year and with the growth of the country have so far, in the estimation of the other side of the House, been below what they ought to be, and certainly that speaks well for the committee.

Under the bill now under consideration the questions presented simply affect the salaries of public officers. It is not difficult to increase salaries. It is not difficult to get them above what they ought to be. It is not difficult to provide officers for which there is no occasion. It is difficult whenever the attempt is made to strike down that which has become an evil and which has incorporated itself into the organization, management, and growth of a party. It is difficult to reach that by reduction of salary or by cutting off useless and superfluous officers.

If we are to believe the half that is told of the effect of the appropriations of this Congress, it will undoubtedly be to lead the country to destruction. We have forgotten this is a Government of the people; we have forgotten this is not a Government of the office-holders. We are reminded, and shall be strongly reminded in less than six months to come, that offices are created and salaries are fixed for the purpose of raising expenses to defeat the will of the people when it comes to the expression of their voice at the ballot-box. I am not surprised when an attempt is made to reduce salaries to such an amount and figure as that thousands of people in this country would be glad to get offices and fill them at the salary to which the Committee on Appropriations say they ought to be reduced—I am not surprised when such an attempt is made we are told to hold them up on purpose to give a margin upon which assessments can be made for campaign purposes, and thereby corruptly influence the people in the expression of their sentiments through the ballot-box.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the foreign representation of the Government in the consular and diplomatic service is cursed and has been cursed with useless officers and positions created simply to provide for somebody unable possibly to take care of himself by the exercise of any vocation at home. I remember an instance in which, although the State of Ohio has had but very few officers as is well known under Republican administration for years past, two Ohioans have filled offices at Honolulu, one being the minister at a salary of $7,500 a year, and the other consul-general at a salary of $4,000 a year.

The consul-general said that all on earth the minister had to do was to draw his salary, and the minister said that that was about all the consul-general had to do, and the one was placed there to see that the other drew his salary regularly, and the other was placed there for the purpose of reciprocating the compliment. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, in this bill the two offices are combined, and I have no doubt that 56,000,000 of people in their majesty in this country will see their Government degraded by having one of these officers at home while the other is drawing a salary.

It is possible that there may be individual instances, such as that referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, in which an individual may not receive all that he ought to receive for the services that he is performing. But if that is true, a single instance of a wrong of that kind can easily be remedied; and the fact that there is one out of fifty-six to which the gentleman can allude, if it is true that he would not receive what he ought to receive, is no reason why the other fifty-five who are receiving more than they are entitled to ought not to be reduced to the amount fixed by the bill. I have entire confidence in the investigation of the gentleman who prepared this bill. I have entire confidence in his wisdom in that research and in the explanation which he made of the bill this morning; and believe that every recommendation he made ought to be adopted by the Committee of the Whole and by the House in the passage of this bill.

Sir, the Government of the United States in its foreign representation, if we are to judge of it by the communication that has been made to this House by the Secretary of State, has forgotten the very purposes and objects and the nature of the Constitution under which we live.

This, sir, is a Government of the people; a Government that disregards the show and the exhibition that it is sought to fasten around royalty; a Government simple in its character, devoid of parade, free from that which would assimilate it in any form whatever to those governments which believe that they were created and exist by divine right; a Government in which the people are the sovereigns and the office-holders the servants, whatever the officers may think. We are reminded by the Secretary of State that we ought to be careful in our combination of the functions of a consul and of a minister lest we in some manner offend the sensitive organs of the courts and the powers to which these ministers are accredited. Why, sir, in every political contest in this country we hear that it is a special recommendation for a candidate that he has been a rail-splitter, a mule-driver upon the canal; that he started from the people, or that he started from the bottom round of the ladder. And who in this country ever said the nostrils of the people were offended by the fact that he had at some time by his own hands earned his own living, or performed the functions of some business, or made his way in life as a laboring man?

And yet, sir, when we go abroad this character of our people is to be and will be entirely laid aside. We are to represent there what? We are to represent the tinsel show and gaudy glitter of effete monarchies; of people who believe they were born to walk upon the necks of laboring men and the laboring masses. If that idea entered into the head of the Secretary of State in the recommendations he has made to this House, and if such opinions are entertained by the head of the diplomatic service, then we as the Representatives of the people certainly have it in our power to teach him that he has forgotten that the people of this country are still the sovereigns. I would commend him, Mr. Chairman, to that old hard-headed Scotch poet, and I want to read a single sentence, trusting that he may at some time read and recollect it:

What tho' on homely fare we dine,
Wear hodden gray, and a' that;
Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine,
A man's a man for a' that,
For a' that and a' that,
Their tinsel show and a' that;
The honest man, tho' e'er sae poor,
Is king o' men for a' that.

[Applause.]

Now, sir, the Secretary of State says that we are to pander to the whims and put ourselves upon such terms as to be welcomed by these courts to which we accredit our diplomates. I believe that the man who represents this country in a foreign country should represent it as Franklin represented it; should represent it as every true American ought to represent it; should represent it in all of its simplicity, in all of its integrity; should represent it in all its purity, and without effort to assimilate himself to the tastes, habits, or character of the people to whom he is accredited.

Mr. Chairman, the man who truly represents this Government will receive at the court to which he is accredited—I care not what be the nature or character of that court—such honor as he can not receive and will not receive by any attempt to imitate the habits of the nations or the characteristics of the people to whom he is accredited. If he goes to a cannibal country I do not believe it is necessary for him to eat a few steaks from a young boy for breakfast in order to prepare himself to be received by the government at which he may desire to be received with proper attention and proper homage. Let him go there and represent the people of this country as they are, in their simplicity, integrity, and power, and he will be honored and respected by the country and by the people to whom he may be accredited.

The course of this country to-day is such that instead of our ministers abroad and our representatives abroad representing the yeomanry of the country, they have come back here and have imported into this country the habits, the characteristics, the marks of distinction between power and the people learned abroad. And in the capital of the Government of this country, the home of a free people, you can not go upon Pennsylvania avenue without finding there on the carriage of every representative of the Government, whether paid for by the Government or by the private individual, some man sitting in front wearing the badge of servitude, and another in the same livery driving the horses. Whence came the custom? It is true that sometimes the fellow with brass buttons sits behind and the other fellow in front. And in this way we may get confused and mixed, those of us who are simple-minded people coming from the country. But the brass buttons were put there as a badge of servitude and to intimate that there was more than one class in this country.

And now we are told that this same custom must be kept up at foreign courts, and you must pay your representatives abroad an amount sufficient to enable them to adhere to the custom there. I believe I have never yet seen a native American, a man imbued with the spirit of our institutions, dressed in brass buttons.

Mr. WELLER. No, sir; you never have.

Mr. FOLLETT. As a rule the men who will consent in this country to so degrade themselves are men who have been accustomed from circumstances to servitude. And it is the pride and glory of the American people that an American will never for any consideration submit to wear the badge of slavery.

Now, if we can cut that off, if we can prohibit it, if we can prevent it by the reduction of compensation to the representatives of the Government abroad, if we can by holding the purse-strings of the nation compel proper representation of Americans at the courts of other countries, I for one shall insist that we do it.

Mr. WELLER. And I, too. Amen.

Mr. FOLLETT. It has been said, Mr. Chairman, and truly said, that there is no politics in this bill. It is purely an American bill. It provides simply and solely for the representation of our Government abroad. It provides for the compensation that shall be paid to those who are sent abroad to represent us; not to represent majesty, not to represent power, not to represent the might of 56,000,000 people, but to represent their simplicity. We are not especially in need of the peculiar forms and methods of the diplomatic service. The Secretary of State tells us that there are various methods to be adopted, various practices to be pursued, various things that are required to be done to enable us successfully to prosecute a diplomatic undertaking.

Sir, diplomacy has been said to be the art of concealment. That is not, however, true of true diplomacy and true American diplomacy. When we as a people have anything to accomplish, we go at it, or ought to go at it, with direct methods and without concealment.

We have an army of but 25,000, and yet who in the United States loses sleep at night for fear of an attack of nations with their armies of hundreds of thousands? We rely for the strength, we rely for the permanency and perpetuity, of our institutions upon the integrity of our people and their devotion to American principles and to our form of Government, and that reliance has hitherto been perfectly secure, and it will remain secure. We are in a position to-day to bid defiance to the world without a navy and without an army, for we know that from whatever quarter an attack may come we have got the hearts of the people, we have got the strong arms of the people, that would come at once to the defense of the Government and would at once repel any attack, come from whatsoever source it might.

So far, then, as any necessity for keeping up a large diplomatic corps abroad is concerned, so far as any necessity for us to assume and to pay inordinate amounts for the purpose of being represented abroad is concerned, it is the sheerest nonsense. Every dollar, Mr. Chairman, taken from the pockets of the people, every dollar uselessly expended by this Government, is profligacy and waste and criminality upon the part of those who assent to this expenditure.

It has been said, Mr. Chairman, that we should separate the functions of consul-general and minister at the courts of Austria and Italy. And why? Is the court of Austria a court the sensitive nostrils of which would be offended by the appearance there of a man who represents the Government in a consular capacity? I happen to know, Mr. Chairman, and to know intimately, the man who is there to-day, and if the emperor's nostrils would be offended by the smell of labor or by the appearance of labor upon the part of the man who represents us there, he would long since have banished him from his court, for he is a man that came from the people, who has worked his own way in the world, who has come up, and come up, too, by the toils and struggles that have brought every man who has attained position in this Government to the position which he has attained. And I am satisfied that the Emperor of Austria, when he understands that the predecessor of the President who nominated him to that court once drove mules upon a canal, will not have his dignity lowered when he knows that behind that administration and behind that minister stand a people proud of what they have achieved by labor and as the result of labor; and I do not believe that the predecessor of the present Secretary of State in that office would ever have urged any such reason for our continuing to pay two officers for performing the functions which one could perform just as well, just as honorabbly, and just as creditably to the Government.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] desires to be heard upon this bill, and I will yield the remainder of my time to him.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his kindness. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, desires to address the committee, and I will reserve the time so kindly yielded to me until that gentleman has been heard.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HERBERT). There is remaining of the time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] thirty-two minutes.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this bill annually recurs, providing for the usual and regular expenditure to carry on our diplomatic and consular system, and its title is an appropriation bill—an ordinary business measure. Such it pretends to be, but in fact it is more. It changes our former legislation and alters in important features the very theory of the system.

Without repeating what has been said by gentlemen on both sides of the House about its practical operation in details, I will, if your patience will bear with me, point out some things which I think will show that this is not merely an appropriation bill, but it is legislation aimed at changing the present consular and diplomatic system, which is based upon the old act of 1856, modifying it not only in detail but in theory, crippling, impairing, and disordering the service.

As I do not wish to speak too long upon this question, I will not attempt to answer the grave arguments which have just been made in regard to the uniforms of domestics or the points made by my friend on my right [Mr. BURNES] in reference to lowering a minister's expenses by reciprocality of diplomatic dinners, the minister eating as much at other tables as he expended in hospitality at his own, a method by which the gentleman thinks he could balance the account and enable us to cheapen the cost of our representatives abroad.

I do not think our present service is perfect; it is capable of many improvements in many directions. But it is so widely extended, so complex in its relations, touching such vast business interests, that it ought to be handled with care by those familiar with its workings; not with partisan zeal nor in any spirit of rash encroachment. It touches the collection of more than $300,000,000 of our revenue and the protection of our people in all lands, the shipping interests of our people, the import trade and also the export trade of our country, which is now dependent more and more for its enlargement upon the efforts of our consular officers.

The President of the United States on the 20th of March sent to this body a communication from the Secretary of State, in which he points out generally many improvements which could be made in our present consular as well as in our diplomatic system. But he suggests, with a modesty which might well be imitated here, that it is not even for that Department to determine at once all the modifications in this vast system, involving so many difficult questions, and the Secretary of State proposes that Congress should provide for a commission of eminent men conversant with the subject, who after studying it carefully might recommend the changes advisable or necessary. The old law of 1856 upon which our present system is based has been changed and modified in many ways from year to year, so as to render it more and more complex. In many cases it was found to be working injustice, which subsequent laws have endeavored to cure. And now this appropriation bill comes in with a body of law touching the organization of the diplomatic and consular service and complicating it far more than ever.

It is true there is a saving on salaries under this bill—I will not repeat the figures—of little sums here and there; a few hundred dollars in one place, two or three thousand dollars in another, upon the salaries of consular officers and their clerks. These reductions impairing the efficiency of the service at the very point of friction, cutting down the pay just at the place where the hard daily work is done, will so confuse and disorder the service, especially as a protection to the revenue, that it will diminish our revenues far more every year than the entire expenditure for our consular service throughout the world.

How much is that expenditure? The entire outlay which we make annually for all our diplomatic officers is somewhere between $350,000 and $400,000. The consular officers are largely paid at the different posts where the service is rendered in fees paid for their services, which are accounted for to the Government and which are turned over in such sums that the whole service is more than self-supporting. This bill, which is nominally for the purpose of appropriating money from the Treasury, is really a legal formula to determine the rule for settling the accounts of these officers, allowing them to keep a part of what they have taken as compensation for the services they have rendered, while the rest is turned into the Treasury. Is that not a very simple and complete answer to the grave discourses we have had here touching the profligacy and extravagance shown throughout the world in the splendor of our foreign service and the cost it entails upon a tax-ridden people?

The mixture of the two branches of the service, the diplomatic and the consular service, which has been referred to repeatedly in this debate, is an evil which the Secretary of State has pointed out with emphasis. Only where constrained by the necessity of the strictest economy, and in places where the consular office was of minor importance commercially, has it heretofore been united with a diplomatic position. A few such posts have been in the service, though it has been the desire to speedily separate the two functions. This bill aggravates the evil, and adds four more double-headed posts, where the same officer is both consular and diplomatic. These duties are in some respects not only different but they are almost inconsistent. The duty of a minister is political. He is to watch and wait. He represents this nation at the court of another. He is charged with the common and united interests of all his countrymen. His responsibilities, when he is called to act, are the very highest. At a given moment what he does may be of supreme importance to us all.

He must know the rulers in the land—the very, very few who rule in many countries, for they have not everywhere our system of popular government. In most countries it is a system distrusted and disliked by the ruling class. There all is determined not by elections, but by half a dozen, perhaps one man, whose whims and will, whose caprices or ambitions or wisdom may affect the interests of our country. A vigilant, able minister seizes every influence for the advantage of his government and its cause. A consul must protect our individual citizens; that is his first duty, to care for American citizens, who everywhere are found throughout the world, moving in all ways, for all purposes—for amusement, business, recreation, study, or trade. The active, impressible, trading, teaching, working, searching Yankee penetrates everywhere. And it ought to be the glory of our nation to have him everywhere followed by our flag, and to have a representative of the country near at hand and efficient to protect him in his person and in all his rights.

It is not by the amount of fees collected that the importance of a consul's duties or position is to be measured, as is done by this bill. Consulates are not all commercial. Every year a large number of our people visit countries like Egypt, and this from motives which all most approve. There is no great trade there with our seaports; but the presence of a consul is essential for the protection and guidance of the hundreds of American travelers who come there every winter. Consuls everywhere represent the power and the paternal, vigilant aid of their country for the care of its poorest wanderer, especially the seamen.

Take such a place as Saint Helena. We have little trade there. You search vainly for returns of fees for certifying invoices. But there comes the great fleet of our whaling ships, stopping as they pass by; there all disputes between the captain and the seamen are to be settled, the consul being the arbiter. The shipment and discharge of seamen must be attended to—the care of the sick and the disabled. These are great and important functions.

Gibraltar is a similar place. So is Mahé, in the Seychelles Islands—a lonely, far-away spot, where so many of our sailors touch. I remember instances that came under my observation, at a time when it was my duty to know the facts, where twenty or thirty of our ships touched at Saint Helena in a month. So of many other posts. A consul must care for the citizen everywhere—must care in a more paternal and vigilant manner for the sailor and for the shipping interest generally. He must care, too, for the extension of our commerce.

This is a comparatively new feature in the present consular system of the United States, that its officers, especially since the time of Mr. Evarts, have been urgently charged with the duty of collecting information of every kind which would conduce to the enlargement of American trade. That has greatly increased the necessity of clerical force and has diversified the duties of consular officers. I think gentlemen on this floor will bear me out when I say that among all the documents printed by Congress those containing the reports of our consular officers concerning the trade of our country abroad are among the most welcome and most sought for by manufacturers who are our constituents at home.

I have said the importance of a consular post was not to be measured by the fees collected, nor by its mere commercial activity; nor should the salaries be graded accordingly, as is done in this bill, cutting down consuls who do not collect much in fees.

But even the commerce is not shown accurately by the fee returns, for half our trade does not appear in consular invoices. We have not only our imports, but we have an export trade that amounted last year to $800,000,000. The consul is charged with doing all he can to cherish, to foster, to widen, to encourage that trade by information sent home and by home information given abroad.

Even in the matter of imports the fees of a consul are an imperfect criterion of the importance of his office, and my friend from Missouri must have been sadly misled if he merely looked over the reports of the fees of consular officers to know how much business passes through their offices.

An invoice pays a fee of $2.50 to the consul. That invoice, made at Paris, may cover one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars' worth of artificial flowers, or bronzes, or what are called "Paris articles." Most of the invoices there are not very large in amount. From Chemnitz also there would be small quantities, as of woolen goods or other articles manufactured in that region. But if the invoice came from Odessa, it would probably be for thousands of dollars' worth of wool on the one invoice. There is no certain indication in the return of fees as to the volume of the business, nor does the business that comes this way serve as a measure to estimate the business going out. Barcelona, which my friend has selected as one of the consulates to be cut down in salary, has little evidence of business in the way of fees; but I ask my friends from the South to take notice that it is the fourth port in rank in Europe for the importation of American cotton. There is no record of that in the consulate. But the consul is the man to whom the consignee looks for information, for guidance in all questions with the consignor at home. The consul is the guardian of commerce in all its aspects.

But, sir, I have been led too far away into general remarks. Let me speak more specifically of some of the reductions in the bill. The changes in our diplomatic service have not been extensive in the heads of missions. But two of them have been diminished—the salaries of the ministers at Rome and at Vienna. I will only remark that those officers are paid less than the representatives at those posts of any other power of our grade in the world; that we, as American citizens, would be as much irritated as any other people if we learned that our representative had made us contemptible or ridiculous or ignoble by his appearance. If we do not allow them a proper compensation, a suitable salary to maintain with dignity and honor the national name, have we a right to ask the representatives of our country to defray the expense of living fittingly out of their own means? Is that a guiding principle for statesmen in framing a law organizing our foreign service?

Again, this bill reduces the salaries of secretaries of legation in nearly all the European capitals, and at the same time it omits to make any provision for paying them anything additional when they serve as acting ministers under the title of chargés d'affaires ad interim. Bear in mind what a secretary of legation is and what he does when he acts as minister. When acting minister he has greatly increased and more responsible duties and greatly increased expenses, and the Government has accordingly given him pay as chargé at half the rate of the minister's salary. This is to be cut off; his pay is to be reduced to a salary of $1,500 a year at a place where that amount of money will not count toward his support as much as a messenger's pay in Washington; upon that salary he is to represent this country; he is to be in daily intercourse with the rulers of a foreign nation; he is to discuss every rising question, contending for our interests, watching all opportunities. He must be no machine clerk. He must be a man of ripe judgment, of wide intelligence, versed in international law, in the usages of nations, in the condition of his country and that to which he is accredited, and master of the special business committed to his charge. Such a man as that it is proposed to pay at the rate of $1,500 a year, and then require him to pay more than that amount in contingent expenses of the legation out of his own pocket. Remember this bill is upon the theory that the minister or acting minister will bear the rent and contingent expenses.

How will this work in cases where the mission is vacant or the minister absent for months? This often occurs. I have observed several instances where the mission to Russia was in the hands of a secretary of legation acting as chargé the greater part of the year. Should he bear all these expenses? Under this bill he would receive no allowance for the extra expense to which he was subjected as chargé d'affaires. On the contrary, it contemplates his paying the rent, postage, telegrams, and in large part the contingent expenses of the legation or else close it.

Remember too, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen so slenderly paid who are in the foreign service have an insecurity in their tenure of office which is not even equaled in the condition of a clerk in Washington. There is something dimly approaching security in the tenure of office for faithful, diligent men here in the Departments. There is none on the part of those in the foreign service. Indeed, no one pretends that there is any regular progress or continuance in our diplomatic service. No one is so visionary as to imagine he can remain permanently in that service. Many clerks here are willing to accept and work for small salaries in view of their continuance in office with something like permanence. What is the practical effect of all this diminution of salaries and elevation of duties and expenses to this class of diplomatic officers? I ask my Democratic friend—and I use the word democratic in its broadest and noblest sense—what is the practical effect of the provisions of this bill? It is a rich man's bill. It is a bill to exclude every man who can not command from his private means money with which to piece out this allowance and to hold an office, it may be, for the very purpose which the last speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT], denounces; that is, the gratification of personal ambition in the position and social privileges which the post may bring, rather than zeal in public duty and willingness to labor patiently and vigilantly at the highest and at the humblest and most fatiguing work of an important office.

What we want in such posts is not mere wealth but ability, the real merit of the man; we want judgment, experience, information, character, but such men will be barred from this service unless they are wealthy. The tendency of such legislation is to send abroad rich men to occupy not only the chief foreign missions, because they alone will be able to sustain the expenditure, but even the subordinate posts will be shut off to nearly every one of our people, however competent. Wealthy men or wealthy men's sons will have to be sent as secretaries of legation; for there is no compensation provided for acting ministers, that is for secretaries of legation, and the burdens upon them are greatly increased. Such would be the practical working of this bill. Is it not a change in the very theory of the service?

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has spoken of the pitiful economy in cutting down $200 on the salaries of the second secretaries of legation, and there are only second secretaries provided for three legations of the United States.

I was sorry to hear an illiberal word from my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], who has generally shown a calm and business spirit in the consideration of this measure. He spoke of second secretaries of legation as gay trifling ornaments, designating them as walking gentlemen kept in the legations for display. Not so. They are patient, hard workers. I know there is not a gentleman on the floor who works harder than I have seen the second secretary of one of these legations, toiling on emergencies through the night long when necessary in the dispatch of public business; a man of recognized ability, whose reputation as a writer on international law is familiar to all who are versed in the recent discussions of such topics, who has vindicated with his powerful pen the rights and honor of our country in the European press during the most critical moments of the crisis in the discussions of the last twenty years, I mean Mr. Henry Vignaud, the able second secretary of legation at Paris, whose articles published in the Mémorial Diplomatique and other European journals during the memorable struggle over the Alabama claims did so much to correct public opinion abroad and maintain the correctness of our position. With such a man in it this position of second secretary of legation is not a mere ornamental post. Far from it. So of the second secretary of legation at Berlin, of whom my colleague [Mr. CANNON] has spoken. The secretary at London is an experienced officer, transferred from Vienna. There is nothing of the honorary in these positions. They are posts of arduous labor, continuous and important, and are in cities where the expense of living makes careful economy necessary with $2,000. I know that the second secretary at Paris declined the position of first secretary because he could not afford to accept it and its social burdens with the salary allowed.

We next come to the mission of Greece, Servia, and Roumania, which it is proposed by this bill to abolish. The destruction of that mission comes unfortunately just at the moment when Greece, responding to public sentiment in America, has removed all restrictions upon the importation of our pork, exerting thus a great initiative influence by her example just at the time when she can best serve us by it and when we most pressingly need it. I commend that to the gentleman from the Northwest.

I may say the active sympathy of the Grecian people for America has never been wanting at any time since the hour of the new birth of that immortal nation, in blood and sorrow, when our people gave them such prompt recognition and assistance. I never met a Greek who did not speak of America, not with cold respect, but with something like love, remembering that the kind hand and encouraging tender voice of our people lifted them to their feet in that terrible and bloody struggle with Turkish tyranny, the birth-hour of their nation.

They are a people something like ourselves. They are the Yankees of the Levant. Greek merchants in Alexandria have branch houses in New York, and Greek merchants of the Black Sea are connected with houses in this country in which they are partners.

The sympathy of the Greek nation, which is the center of about twelve millions of people of that race, religion, and sentiment, should not be lightly thrown away. But what is the economy? What is the great saving for which three nations are chilled? Fifteen hundred dollars. We are now paying $6,500 to a minister who is accredited to Greece and to two other governments. It is proposed to send a two-thousand-dollar consul to take the place of the minister in Greece, and pay $3,000 to a consul at Bucharest to replace the mission to Roumania; in all, $5,000 instead of $6,500, to support the mission to the three nations filled by one individual.

So, too, with reference to Servia; except that not even a consul replaces the minister. Now, there is a trade springing up with Servia, and although we have heard it stated here that no consul was required, I may give as one item that we sent there last year some five hundred thousand dollars' worth of petroleum. With Servia, as also with Roumania, we have just concluded a treaty of commerce and amity. Why should we then cut off a mission that is very gratifying to their national feelings, which is conducive to our trade and general interests, and which is in fact becoming a necessity by reason of the growing commerce between our country and all that region, replacing it with a consulate that must become comparatively ineffective; and only for the purpose of saving $1,500?

There, too, is Egypt, an independent power in point of fact, though nominally Turkish, where we have a diplomatic agent or consul-general, who is to be cut off by this bill, and a consul at $2,000 substituted. This will take away the medium for diplomatic communication. Our Government now participates in the mixed courts and the commissions sitting in Egypt, naming three American judges, who are paid by the Egyptian Government. Our diplomatic agent also participates in all administrative questions affecting foreigners, and he has jurisdiction as a judge to try criminal cases where Americans are defendants. There are great numbers of Americans of the best class of our people who visit that interesting country every year, and they are entitled to the protection of the Government, and its representative should have dignity, ability, and power.

This bill cuts off numerous consulates entirely, reduces many to lower pay, and deprives the consulates of nearly half of their present allowance for clerk-hire, just when the work is rapidly increasing and there is a demand from all sides for more force to do the work the customs laws and State Department regulations have in recent years greatly enlarged.

I will speak of one other very practical point affected by this bill. It cuts down a long line of consulates from $1,500 to $1,000 a year. Now, a consul at $1,000 a year has the right to trade; those receiving more than that can not. But an American can not readily enter into trade in a foreign country, and an American who will go abroad on a salary of $1,000 a year is not likely to be a man of sufficient commercial ability to make a profit in the close cutting trade that is carried on, with very small profits, in the old countries. What, then, will be the result of this change? It will result simply in this: that the Department will have to appoint resident foreigners, engaged in business, and thus aliens will be generally appointed in these positions, or else the consulates will be closed. That will be of necessity the result.

These officers, themselves merchants sending goods to our country, will certify to their own invoices; not only that, they will be the consular officers to certify the invoices of goods of their rival merchants. Here is a basis laid by this bill, with its startling innovations, for infinite trouble and charges of unfairness and frauds. It turns out Americans to turn in foreigners and beget confusion. This is, therefore, not only a rich man's bill, but a bill to replace Americans with foreigners in a long line of officers. It cuts down the appropriation for clerk-hire largely. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] spoke of that, but did not mention its practical effect. The work in the consulates, as I just remarked, is rapidly increasing in recent years.

Owing to changes in our customs laws and new regulations of the Department itself, the increase of the duty of these officers is very marked. The chief of this bureau in the State Department informs me that within five years the duties of the principal employés in the great consulates has tripled. For example, this whole system of collecting information concerning the condition of trade, market rates, &c., has been initiated but a few years back. Now many consulates, especially the larger ones, are asking for more clerical force. At such a moment it is proposed to cut off nearly half of the allowance that they are now granted by the law. Now, the allowance to-day for clerical force at some of the consulates is a great deal less than sufficient to meet the current work of the office and for the preparation of these reports, unless the consul because he receives unofficial fees pays the balance out of his own pocket. But it is proposed here to so cripple the service that it will be wholly insufficient for the daily routine of work, the invoices, reports, and other consular business, and thus produce confusion in our revenue system, which will probably cost us far more in loss of revenue than all the saving proposed ten times over.

The service is one that depends upon so many sources of support, it cuts in so many directions, its operations and those of the Treasury are so interdependent, and the duties of the officers are so manifold in different parts of the world, such as judges in the East, postmasters in China, diplomatic officers in many cases, officers of the revenue, everywhere as representatives of the Government, as protectors of citizens, that any changes made must be made very carefully. The Department itself in dealing with proposed changes has always used the utmost caution, and even then has sometimes found it advisable to retrace its steps. As the system stands to-day it is the work of thirty-six Secretaries of State and nineteen Comptrollers, who have examined and tested its methods of business and system of checks and accounts, and salaries and other payments, from year to year, with constant new corrections. They are desirous of still further improving it.

But the changes here so rudely proposed and so far-reaching will disorder, impair, and cripple it. Let me give an instance of the confusion it will bring. There is no provision here for the legation buildings in China and in Japan. We declined to accept the grounds which those governments offered to give us to build legations upon; hence a house is rented. Pursuant to an act of Congress the lease of these premises has been made, dated the 23d day of January, 1884, in its last renewal, which runs to March 15, 1886, for the one at Pekin in China. That is $3,100 a year. There is a lease for the building at Tokio, which will run also until March 15, 1886. No provision is made by this bill for their rent. The minister must pay it from his salary or his own means, if paid at all. Suppose the minister dies or resigns or is absent from his post. The secretary's pay is now fixed at $1,800. He can not receive chargé pay, for that is cut off. He only has $1,800 a year, out of which he has to pay $3,100 rent, and after that to pay nearly all of the other expenses of the legation, and then pay his own expenses with the balance. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. He will be in a condition to represent our people worthily then. There will be no riches there, no display.

Mr. HITT. It is very certain no poor man, though he had all the knowledge of Wheaton in international law and all the ability of Webster in diplomacy, could ever accept that position. All the allowance for the contingent expenses of our legations is cut off except $15,500 for stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs—nothing for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messengers, &c. Why, sir, I have seen instances in the State Department where a single telegram cost as much as the salary of a secretary for a whole year.

Mr. KASSON. One of them cost in Mr. Seward's time $4,000.

Mr. HITT. Yes, sir; I well remember that instance, and one from Geneva cost nearly as much. No provision is made here for postage. But the items have been given in detail by my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I will not repeat them.

Let me point out another instance of the practical operation of this bill. There is a provision of law that no man shall be paid a salary as consul without subscribing the oath of allegiance. That excludes foreigners, aliens. In the bill ordinarily is inserted $10,000 for consular officers who are aliens. That is stricken out here. What will be the result? We have a great many of our vice-consuls who are aliens. There are no others that can be obtained. It is impossible to induce an American who is honest and capable to go from this country to a remote city, perhaps in some yellow-fever region, for a compensation of $50 or $75 a year. The consul therefore names and the Department appoints some merchant or banker, some respectable man living at the place, who receives no compensation unless there arises a vacancy or the chief officer is absent. Upon him, when thus acting, would fall these miscellaneous expenses which are not provided for in this bill. And yet by this bill he is to receive no compensation whatever. That will be the practical operation of it. And there are very many offices of this kind, dozens and dozens of them in our consular system.

There is one point which must have been observed by my friend who sits before me, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], who is so well versed in diplomatic business. There is no provision here for the overlapping salaries. When a man is appointed minister to a foreign court it is not supposed that he knows everything about his duties, and he is required to report for instructions; he then has submitted to him all the records of the State Department and all the correspondence which could aid him in qualifying himself for new, difficult, and responsible duties. He is required to get through that in thirty days. Then he has a number of days proportionate to the distance to his post allowed him for transit there; during that time he draws salary. Under this bill there is no provision for the payment of the minister who is at the post, and the contemporary payment of the new minister on his way out. The result will be that the new minister will not start, will not be appointed in fact, until the old one has actually returned, thus leaving the post vacant during all the time occupied by the return of the old minister, and the time of giving instructions to, and of the journey out of the new minister.

Do you know how long that will be? The minister to China resigning would have not exceeding seventy days to return; the outgoing minister who would then be appointed would have thirty days for instructions, and then not exceeding seventy days to go to his post; in all, one hundred and seventy days. During those months, almost half a year, that legation would be under the charge of the secretary of the legation acting as minister. Such a man could not readily be obtained for $1,800 a year of the ability, intelligence, character, experience, and tact necessary, as we would suppose, to fit him for the high duties of minister to China. And yet he must be the minister for half a year; necessarily so by the operation of this bill. And to cap the absurdity, while he was thus acting as minister he would be required to pay rent and other expenses far greater than his salary. It is the theory of the gentlemen who framed the bill that our ministers will be willing, for the honor of the positions, out of their own abundant fortunes to pay all these expenses. I hope there will hereafter be ministers as there are to-day, and as there have been in the grandest days of the Republic, who were renowned men, rich in genius and patriotism only, and who were appointed for other reasons than that they were willing to pay the Government's bills.

Our consular service is a potent factor in our commercial activity and a great instrument for its extension. It is a very important part of our revenue system. It concerns nearly and immediately all our exporting industry. We treat it with far less liberality than do other nations which have a commerce not nearly equal to our own, and no such magnificent prospects of enlargement as are offered to us to induce a liberal fostering care of that system, which is the very instrument of progress. The British system is carefully framed, far-seeing, efficient, tested thousands of times, with which ours has often come in conflict in its personnel at various ports; and while the personnel of our service is efficient, is intelligent, is generally excellent, I believe that the wiser and more liberal policy of the English Government in extending these agents of its might and its trade everywhere, arming them with power and surrounding them with the means of at least comfortable livelihood, has been one of the greatest elements in the world-embracing success of English trade.

I will mention but one other point, and will then yield the floor to my friend from New York [Mr. POTTER]. We find there is omitted from this bill the usual appropriation of $10,000 for carrying out the neutrality act. That is the secret-service fund used by the Secretary of State, and it has in recent times been chiefly used to prevent the violation of neutrality between our country and Spain. At this very moment there is an expedition ravaging Cuba which has gone from our shores, and which has done much to inflame public feeling and complicate the relations between two governments that are now engaged in most important negotiations looking to the benefit of our commerce, and which we think will greatly liberate its movements and extend our trade with their most important colony. This neutrality item has been held, ever since the beginning of the century, to be an essential part of the appropriation bill for the diplomatic and consular service.

This fund is open to the inspection of all proper persons, such as the committees of the House and Senate, who may wish to know what has been done with it. I may say, without going farther than is discreet and proper, that I believe the secret-service fund of the State Department is the most vigilantly and carefully scrutinized by the Secretary of State himself of all the accounts that pass through that Department. The reasons are manifest, are evident. The responsibility is greater than in any other account, for it can not be shared. Being a secret fund it is most carefully guarded in the modes of its expenditure.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. I would inquire, Mr. Chairman, how much time there is yielded to me?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMMOND). The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. POTTER. That will be time enough for all I desire to say. I wish as a Democrat and a friend of economy, as a Democrat who has trodden the pathway of labor from the time he was a barefooted boy on the hill-side to this day, to enter my protest against what I believe is unjust to the Democratic sentiment of the country, unjust to the great purposes and objects of the Government which we represent, and unwise from beginning to end.

Instead of extending our foreign service at the very time when in the midst of an aroused and progressive sentiment of the world we should be extending its influences everywhere, we are here busy with a proposition to cut down the salaries of our consuls from $2,500 a year to $1,800 a year. I believe there are some twenty-nine or thirty consuls to be dealt with in this way by this bill.

It has been said here, and justly said, that the policy proposed by this bill is one to make these offices such as can only be filled by the rich and the sons of the rich. As a Democrat, as a laboring man, as a lover of labor, as a believer in manhood above property, as a believer in the duty of this Government to encourage manhood and to give it its just reward, I protest against such legislation as this.

Why, sir, a competent man to fill one of these offices and to do what a consul of this great nation should do in a foreign country, to gather the information which he should gather, and to send it back to us for publication here in such form that it may come before the more than 58,000,000 of people in this country and encourage our commerce and awaken the ambition of our people to intercourse with all parts of the world, should receive, instead of $1,800, at least $3,000 a year. I would much rather have seen a bill to increase his salary from $2,500 to $3,000 a year.

I do not believe there is a respectable commercial house in this country that would think of sending a man to China, to Japan, or to any other part of the world to look after its interests and to extend its business in any one of those countries—there is not a commercial house that would think of sending such a man there whom it could hire for even $2,500 a year.

Such a proposition is equivalent, and I wish to emphasize this point, to saying to the young of the country, to the young men of the interior, it may be from the State of Ohio, to young men everywhere who are competent to fill these offices and are ambitious of extending the influences of their country, ambitious of fitting themselves by experience abroad to come back here and be the most valuable of citizens at home—it is equivalent to saying to those young men: "You can not go to perform these duties; the sons of such men as have wealth can go, because their fathers can support them." It is saying to the great body of American young men from the interior, from the farms of the country, and I came from one of those farms, from the school-houses of the country: "You can not go to fill these places, because the salary is inadequate for you to support yourselves there."

This policy is all wrong; it is an un-American policy; it is an undemocratic policy. It is a policy unworthy this great nation of fifty-eight millions of people, with a commerce to be extended until it shall reach every nation on the earth, and by so doing enable us to reap from those nations the richest of harvests.

I find an item in this bill which proposes to cut down entirely the expenditures for interpreters this round world over, for all the commerce of the United States, for all the intercourse of this great country with all the other countries of the world, from $19,000 a year to $5,000 a year. Sir, what can you do with $5,000 a year throughout the length and breadth of the great commercial world in enabling our agents, our consuls, our ministers to hold intercourse with foreign nations in an entirely foreign language, to them a dead language? Is it intended to exclude everybody from going to China unless he has been instructed in the Chinese language, or to Japan unless he has been instructed in the Japanese language?

Five thousand dollars a year for interpreters! We had far better cut it off altogether. It is equivalent to saying to Japan, for instance, that she must hold her intercourse with us in the English language; or at any rate that we will afford no facilities to our ministers, consuls, and agents who go there to deal with those people in their own language. Five thousand dollars a year for interpreters! Sir, that is less than is expended for interpreters in a single lawsuit in one of our courts to enable the parties engaged in that suit to fully present the evidence that may be given by foreigners.

It is also proposed to cut down the entire contingent fund from $85,000 a year to $15,500 a year. I understand that contingent fund furnishes the only means provided for paying rent, postage, telegrams, for furniture, traveling expenses, loss of exchange, &c., by all our ministers, all our consuls and commercial agents the entire world over. There is no allegation here that there has been any abuse in the expenditure of that contingent fund, and there is no ground alleged for any apprehension that it will be abused. I protest that $85,000 a year is not too much for the contingent fund, subject as it is to the care and responsibility of the Executive of this nation. That is not too much to enable him to meet all the exigencies that are to be met, and to provide for the honest wants of all our consuls and ministers throughout the world.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied, from informal conversation with gentlemen representing the other side, that it is better now to have some understanding with regard to the continuation of this general debate. I therefore move that the committee now rise, in order that the House may agree upon some limitation in that regard.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I have the floor already.

Mr. BURNES. Your rights shall be preserved in the arrangement.

The motion of Mr. BURNES was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and pending that motion I move that general debate upon the bill, excepting half an hour for the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON]——

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I have an hour.

Mr. BURNES. I understood it was half an hour.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. An hour.

A MEMBER. Thirty-two minutes.

Mr. BURNES. I move that, excepting thirty-two minutes for the gentleman from New York, general debate be limited to one hour.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Some time ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] was kind enough to yield me thirty minutes. As my name came next after the gentleman from Indiana I declined to take that time, preferring to await my turn. My turn has now come. If the gentleman from Missouri had not moved to limit debate, I would have been entitled to the floor for an hour. I do not think it fair now, when others have spoken, that I should be limited. I want my time and my own time. I intended to return the thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, and postponed my remarks until I could take the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves, as the Chair understands, that general debate in Committee of the Whole upon the pending appropriation bill be limited to one hour and thirty-two minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. That is enough.

Mr. BELFORD. I want to give notice that unless we can have two hours more for general debate I will demand a quorum.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BURNES to limit debate, there were—ayes 52, noes 50.

Mr. BELFORD. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BURNES and Mr. BELFORD were appointed.

Mr. BELFORD. I make a proposition that two hours be allowed for further discussion on this bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places.

The House proceeded to divide; but before the count by tellers was concluded,

Mr. BURNES said: No further count is demanded. I modify my motion so as to limit debate to one hour and forty-two minutes.

Mr. BELFORD. I accept that.

The motion of Mr. BURNES as modified was agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next. I will state my reason for making this motion. An excursion has been gotten up, in which the survivors of the First Corps of the old Army of the Potomac will participate. The citizens of Fredericksburg have invited members of Congress taking part in this excursion to be their guests. One hundred and ten members have accepted the invitation. We do not wish to impede the business of the House, but the absence of so many members will probably make it difficult to transact business here to-morrow. There are also persons here who have some other duties to attend to. For them I do not speak. But I think it is the general wish that the House adjourn from to-day till Friday.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope this proposition will not prevail. Those who desire to go away from necessity or amusement must take the responsibility. There are some, I know, who desire to remain here and proceed with the appropriation bills. If this motion be adopted, we shall lose one entire day which would otherwise be given to the consideration of these bills. If we meet to-morrow and dispose of the pending appropriation bill there is little doubt that we can also conclude the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. There is really little opposition in the committee to the Army appropriation bill, and I do not think there will be much in the House. The Secretary of War and all parties in interest seem to acquiesce in that bill as reported. So that if we should not have a quorum to-morrow we may be able to conclude that bill except the vote upon its final passage. I hope, in the interest of public business and with a view to securing an early adjournment, that the motion of the gentleman from California will not be adopted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I know no reason for this adjournment over to-morrow except that the races are going on. Now, we do not wish to put ourselves in the position of adjourning over to attend the races.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS] has stated the reasons why he asked for the adjournment over.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 62.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BURNES'S motion was then agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; and by order of the House general debate has been limited to one hour and forty-two minutes.

Mr. BURNES. I wish to state before the gentleman from New York proceeds that the understanding is that the gentleman from New York is to occupy thirty-two minutes, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] shall have ten minutes, and the remaining hour shall be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Can I have no more than that?

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the gentleman is limited to thirty-two minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. By an arrangement made in the House the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] is now recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, if I were at the race-course I might address the majority of this House. [Laughter.] They are not here to-day, although the Democratic party has over seventy majority. During the last five weeks we have failed on five occasions to have a quorum; and the Republicans have helped to get it. That is a magnificent party into whose hands to intrust the destinies of this nation, is it not? Gentlemen, you need not get nervous; it is God's honest truth, and the people will know it before this campaign is over—that with a majority of over seventy you can not muster a quorum in the House of Representatives. And so incompetent and stupid have you been that with the aid of the Republicans on this side you have not been able to carry through your great and important measures.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. BELFORD. I can not yield. Let the gentleman speak in his own time.

Mr. KING. Were you not at the races yesterday, yourself? [Laughter.]

Mr. BELFORD. I am speaking in my own time; you take yours. [Laughter.]

This a magnificent spectacle to go before the country in the coming campaign—with a majority of over seventy you can not produce a quorum. Your members are out betting on which horse will win; and probably they will all lose, as they ought. [Laughter.]

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Which won yesterday afternoon?

Mr. BELFORD. I do not know.

Now, let me call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to one fact about this bill. First, here is a reduction—I have had it figured up by my clerk—a reduction of $318,385. Have you heard the ticking of the telegraph from New York to-day announcing that the business interests of that city are in a state of perfect disaster? Why, sir, you have half the currency of this country locked up in the Treasury.

Mr. SPRINGER. You do not charge that upon the Democrats?

Mr. BELFORD. I am not accusing you Democrats of that; but I am accusing you of the fact that you will not put it out. You will not put it out; and you are diminishing the appropriations all the time.

Mr. KING. Did you not yesterday at the races lose $125 in silver?

Mr. BELFORD. Sir, the wisdom of the world made a shield, gold on one side and silver on the other; it was swung up in the very face of the nations of the earth; each reverenced and adored it——

Mr. KING. Is that the way you did yesterday at the races?

Mr. BELFORD. Well, I did not bet any at the races. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. You were there, were you not?

Mr. BELFORD. Now let me get along. [Laughter.] I say that you gentlemen can not deceive the people of this country by the policy you are pursuing under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. We have a President from New York, a Secretary of the Treasury from New York, and a chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from Pennsylvania. These two States, as I have said here repeatedly, are governing and controlling the fortunes of the country; and you men of the South do not seem to have sense enough to comprehend that question. [Laughter.]

Here we are on the very verge of a volcano. Banks are failing everywhere. A panic is threatened in every direction. Yet against the interests of the great West and the great South you are allowing a New York President and a New York Secretary of the Treasury and a Pennsylvania chairman of the Appropriations Committee to hold on to the funds now hoarded in the Treasury.

I tell you gentlemen that within one year you will see the greatest panic we have witnessed in the last fifty years. Mark my prophecy. You can ignore my prediction, but the panic is coming all the same.

The South, the great and majestic South, of which I am proud to-day because it is a part of my country, and the great West should not allow themselves to be hinged and tied and barreled to the arrogance of Pennsylvania and New York. [Laughter.] I have no hesitation in making that illustration. You will find that my prediction inside of twelve months will be verified.

Mr. WELLER. If you are not careful they will dub you "Calamity," too, and we will have to share the honors to my discomfiture. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BELFORD. Oh, let me alone. I propose to visit the South to-morrow. I am going to study her resources. She is a part of my country. The war is over, and all my prejudices are dissipated.

I ask you in the interest of your respective States to unlock the vaults of the Treasury [laughter and applause] so they can live. And just observe one thing—they will live. I do not propose that a Republican President from New York and a Republican Secretary of the Treasury from New York shall govern and guide with bob-tails lined and formed of bulletins from Wall street. [Laughter.] I can sleep as well under the guidance of a Democratic President as I can under the guidance of a Republican President [applause] who reaches down to the great millionaires of Wall street. I appeal to you to look at your own interest; for I can say to you as I said a moment ago, inside of a year we are not going to have a civil war, but we are going to have a social war. Hear the thunder of the laboring people at Pittsburgh. See the commotion at Chicago. Yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania is putting more and more money into the Treasury and keeping it out of the hands of honest labor. I would like the gentleman to answer that question if he is in his place and able to do it.

Mr. KING. Did you not vote againt the bill reducing taxes?

Mr. BELFORD. There is a secret history about that. [Laughter.] I will simply say that I have voted against every bill to increase the amount of revenue going into the Treasury. I voted to repeal the internal taxes. Did you vote for that bill?

Mr. KING. I voted for a bill to reduce taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BELFORD. Just wait a minute. I voted for the whisky bonded-extension bill to keep $60,000,000 of money out among the people, and I voted for it against what is called the moral sentiment of the country because it did that very thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BELFORD. Oh, give me another minute.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I have two minutes of my time remaining and I will give them to the gentleman.

Mr. BURNES. I feel under some obligation to my friend from Colorado because of a talk we had while acting as tellers, and I therefore yield to him five minutes also of the time from this side of the question.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to say, sir, that every vote I have cast this winter except the vote on Mr. MORRISON'S tariff bill, and against which I voted, has been in the interest of the South and of the West. I have stood up for the iron interests of Pennsylvania, I have stood up for the silk industries of New Jersey, I have stood up for the cotton industries of Connecticut, I have stood up for the wool interests of Vermont and Ohio, and if those interests have failed to be protected it is owing to the dereliction of the Democratic side of the House. A tariff is nothing but a bundle of mutualities. Each State joins its shield with the other States together and protects in that manner its own interests. That is a tariff and nothing else. I have been generous to Pennsylvania and to New York while those two great States have steadily made war on the interests of mine. But yet, remembering the love of my early youth, I have stood by the State where I was born and I am willing to stand there now.

But, sir, when I see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on every bill, on all questions, constantly putting into the Treasury money taken from the hands of the people, the product of the spoliation of labor in this country, and putting that under the charge of a Secretary of the Treasury from New York, I lose my respect for the financial policy that governs that great State where I was born; I lose my respect for the financial policy of New York, that is seeking through the influence of Wall street to govern, direct, and control the Treasury of this country; and being a man from the West, I appeal to you men from the South, and tell you without fear, let us join our shields together and see if we can not control this great and magnificent nation. You may talk about demagogues, and I might talk about fools. [Laughter.] But what I want to do is to see these interests of the South, to see the South, with her magnificent possibilities, with her great agricultural areas, with her gorgeous resources, joining her opportunities with those of the West, and taking possession of this nation against the little clique that live in Pennsylvania, New York, and New England—to see if we can not run this country in the interest of the poor laboring people of the nation. That is what I want to see.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the order of the House 55 minutes remain of general debate, to be divided between both sides. Five minutes have already been exhausted on one side of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I yield now such time as the gentleman from Iowa may desire.

Mr. KASSON. It is perhaps desirable that the other side should proceed first. The gentleman from Missouri was recognized.

Mr. CANNON. It is suggested, and I believe it is correct, that the gentleman from Missouri was recognized. If he desires to do so I will not apply to be recognized until after he has concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know what arrangement gentlemen may make. The Chair was advised, however, that the gentleman from Illinois would control the first half hour, and only recognized the gentleman from Missouri to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado because of some understanding between them. The gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Then I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. I shall not occupy so much time.

The manner in which the questions of this bill have been presented rather discourage one who talks not from any party standpoint at all, but only from the point of national interests. I can not devote any time to answering such declarations as were made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] that we on this side are not satisfied with any bill in which reductions are made, and are not satisfied with this bill because it makes reductions. Anybody can say that to any man who has a distinct opinion of the proper and fitting grade upon which public expenses are to be maintained. If he were to cut down the salaries of the different officers enumerated in this bill to $100 a year he could make the same statement and with equal propriety.

The simple truth is, and I must talk to gentlemen upon the other side of this House, if I talk at all, upon the theory that their minds are open to do what is fair and just—the simple fact is that this is one of the last bills in the world on which reductions can be made from year to year. Nearly all the expenses which constitute the great body of the bill are fixed by law, and most of them by a law of twenty-eight years standing; and I did not think that on this question the Committee on Appropriations would assume so largely the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I should hardly have opened my mouth upon this subject had it been presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But knowing as I do that it was not intended to be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations to revise our whole diplomatic and consular system, I can not help appealing to gentlemen on both sides of the House to consider whether it is wise to accept this hasty conclusion. It is based upon mere questions of dollars and cents as presented by this committee, which is not charged at all with the subject of the organization of this foreign service.

Mr. Chairman, the law as it stands now was the result of consideration by two successive Congresses upon reports from their Committees on Foreign Affairs. The law as it stands upon the statute-books now is substantially the law of 1856 and was based upon a report made by the proper committee which reviewed the entire subject of our foreign relations and the means for maintaining them.

With partial changes that law stands the law to-day. Now, for the first time, from another committee of the House to which no foreign subject is referred except the payment of salaries fixed by law, comes a revision of all your foreign service, destroying ministries, abolishing consulates, rearranging salaries, and opening up the entire subject of our foreign relations, upon which we have not a syllable of report from your Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Is it safe, is it right, to do this thing? Let me say I do not intend to make a motion myself to change your bill. It is for the majority to consider what ought to be done, because the responsibility is on them. I interpose no obstacle to your treating the subject, gentlemen, as you think wise. But I do call your attention to the fundamental question whether you ought not to wait for the action of your own proper organ, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, before changing this system.

In 1856, when the present system became the law of the United States, I find that they were so anxious to adopt these amendments of the law as it stood before that when the motion was made to suspend the rules and consider the bill it was carried by 119 yeas to 42 nays. Remember it was in President Pierce's administration. The subject having thus been brought before the House, the bill which reorganized the service on the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was passed in the House by 103 yeas to 56 nays, and was approved by President Pierce. Among the members who supported this measure fixing salaries and organizing the service—among its advocates I find were Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina, Mr. BARBOUR of Virginia, Mr. Howell Cobb of Georgia, Mr. Henry Winter Davis of Maryland, Mr. Humphrey Marshall of Kentucky, Mr. Pennington of New Jersey (afterwards Speaker), Mr. Seward, and Mr. Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia. So that you find the present arrangement of your service and salaries was made independent of party, with the advice of a Democratic administration, and placed on your statute-book after careful examination of the proper committee, in order to make a permanent system which would be worthy the dignity and the honor of the country.

That law has stood as I have said, with slight modifications, since 1856. We have added consulates because of the necessities of business. Our country at this moment is seeking to extend its grasp upon the commerce of the world; and to prevent fraud at our custom-houses it has been necessary to enlarge our consular service. But notwithstanding this enlargement, as has been stated to you in the speech of my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] which I can not profess to equal in soundness and merit—able and experienced as he is in service abroad, in the Department of State, and as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs—as has been shown by that gentleman these expenses, although larger than made in the law of 1856, are still met substantially by the pecuniary returns of the service itself.

Now, the bill of my good friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], whose integrity and judgment upon affairs within his acquaintance I do not for a moment doubt, proposes to cut off those consulates which do not pay their way. It is as if the Western Union Telegraph Company and the United States Post-Office Department should cut off every office that does not contribute an amount equal to all its expenses. We must have our consuls where commercial business goes even in its incipient stages. When I was sent on one occasion to one of the points deprived of service by this bill, in Servia, to make a treaty with that country just after its independence, I found an American there complaining that the United States had no representative, minister, or consul at Belgrade; that he urgently needed the aid of one in his enterprise; that he remained there because he was endeavoring to make an important contract for American fire-arms with the Servian Government, and he found nobody's help, nobody's assistance, and nobody to appeal to. And I believe finally the contract failed.

I would like to put this question before the House upon its simple merits. I have no time and no intention to go over the bill. I wish only to say, as I have already indicated, that its provisions—and I beg pardon of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]—as far as my experience and observation go, I know to be detrimental alike to the honor and the commercial interests of the United States.

Now, sir, on the question of salary and diplomatic expenses and usages an appeal has been made to the example of Franklin, a man than whom perhaps no one so sage has ever appeared upon the American continent. He has been represented as an example of what an American minister ought to be, and it has been impliedly conveyed that we paid very small sums to our ministers at that time, and that their habits were simple and retiring. I have the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin in my hand, and I find here a statement of salaries that were paid. He says, on page 188:

I see in one of the estimates sent me that a quarter's salary of the minister is reckoned at 14,513 livres and the other is reckoned at 16,667 livres.

And then he says—

Hitherto we have taken 15,000 for a quarter.

The livre has been replaced by the franc of the same value. Thus you find that the pay then was about $12,000 per annum to each of our three ministers. And you will find that $12,000 then would have bought what $20,000 or $25,000 would be required to buy to-day. But this is not all. I look further in his autobiography and I find that Mr. Adams writes to him as a brother minister and says:

I do not mean to be difficult about these things, but that we may have a plan for the future, I beg leave to propose—

And I call the attention of my friend who objects to all contingent allowances for expenses to this—

I beg leave to propose that the wages and expenses of the maître d'hôtel, and cook, and of all the servants, their clothes—

For they wore liveries then—and every other expense for them, the wages, clothes, and other expenses of the coachman, the hire of the horses and carriage, the expense of postage of letters, of expresses to Paris and Versailles and elsewhere, of stationery ware, and all the expenses of the family should be paid out of the money to be drawn from the banker by our joint order. If to these Dr. Franklin chooses to add the washerwoman's accounts for her services, &c., I have no objection.

That was Mr. Adams's proposition, and Dr. Franklin says in his reply:

I very much approve your plan with regard to our future accounts, and wish it to be followed.

So, then, your model minister, Benjamin Franklin, with a salary which was worth more then than the salary of our minister to Paris is to-day, united with Mr. Adams, as simple a republican as ever went to a foreign court or staid at home, in the suggestion that all their expenses of living should be allowed in addition to their salary, and that, too, at a time when the country was poor. He says further in the same connection:

It has always been my intention to pay for the education of my children, their clothes, &c., as well as books and other things for my private use; and whatever I spend in this way I shall give Congress credit for, to be deducted out of the allowance they have promised us. But as the article of clothes for ourselves here is necessarily much higher than if we were not in public service, I submit it to your consideration whether that article ought not to be reckoned among the expenses for the public. I know I had clothes enough at home to have lasted me my lifetime in a country where I was under small necessity of following new fashions.

There you find him actually claiming that in consequence of the extra dressing required at a foreign court Congress should allow him the expenses of his extra clothing. I need not say more to show that the law as it now stands was a moderate law in 1856 and is to-day still more moderate than it was then.

While they then did wear elaborate dresses at court, I tell my friend from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] who last spoke, and who assumed that they were wearing gewgaws, epaulets, golden eagles, brass buttons, &c., that I have never known or seen one of our foreign ministers with that kind of dress on. And I have never heard of but two who ever wore any dress of that description, one of whom is now dead and the other has been long out of office.

The simple American dress, so far as my experience extends, is what they wear at foreign courts. They dress there with all the simplicity that prevails at the White House here in Washington. I will not appeal to personal experience; it is disagreeable always to do so, and is not fair, because the House does not know what that experience is, and therefore I will not state it here. I ask gentlemen if a minister abroad can pay from $5,000 to $8,000 a year for house-rent, dress his family as decently as you would dress your family here in Washington, and maintain the respectability of Franklin's time on any less sum than the salary provided by existing law?

I think the House hardly desires an answer to all that my friend from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] has uttered. But I find in the will of Benjamin Franklin this clause:

The King of France's picture—

That was a picture, you will remember, that was presented to honest Benjamin Franklin by the King of France, being his own portrait—the King of France's picture, set with four hundred and eight diamonds, I give to my daughter, Sarah Bache, &c.

So you will see that your model minister received, as my friend from Brooklyn would say, a royal gewgaw, set with the enormous value of four hundred and eight diamonds, one row of which this book states was sold by his heirs, and on the proceeds of that sale the heirs and their family made the tour of Europe. I make this simple statement to show how the imagination of men, trusting to their theory of simplicity, fails to recognize the necessity, if your ministers abroad would be successful, of being on good terms with the governments to which they go, and maintaining courtesy and decency in rank and appearance and intercourse with foreign society.

Further, lest I fail to do Benjamin Franklin full justice in these respects, let me show you that the aristocracy, having great power in the government of his time, made a willing favorite of him. A fête was given him at a place in the country called Sanoy. I read from a foot-note in the same biography:

When the approach of Dr. Franklin's carriage was announced—

So you perceive that our plain Dr. Franklin kept his carriage—

When the approach of Dr. Franklin's carriage was announced they all set off on foot from the chateau and met him at the distance of about a half a mile.

He was going to visit, not the cabin of a laboring man, but a chateau of the aristocracy.

He was handed from his carriage by the countess—

Wicked man! A countess actually helped him out of his carriage, and he was not recalled by the fathers of the Republic—

He was handed from his carriage by the countess, who upon his alighting pronounced the following verses of her own composition.

They are given here in French.

They walked slowly to the chateau, where they sat down to a splendid dinner. At the first glass of wine the following stanza was sung, which became the chorus of the day, accompanied by instrumental music.

How fortunate that it was not Mr. Lowell, our minister to England. I have not a very good knowledge of the French language and I dare not undertake to read the stanzas here given, but will give a rough translation of it. I suppose the gentleman would not regard me as a good American if I knew even a little bit of French; but I will give a rough translation of it:

We celebrate the memory of Benjamin; we sing the good he has done to mortals; in America he will have altars erected to him, and in Sanoy we drink to his glory.

Ah, if that had been done to Mr. Lowell in England, and it was published in some newspaper, how the gentleman from New York would make his declamation ring through this Hall!

At the second glass the countess sang the following quatrain.

I am sorry to see that honest Benjamin took the second glass.

At the third glass the Viscount d'Hondetot sang—

The viscount sang to our honest Benjamin, undoubtedly trying to corrupt him. Mark you, it was at his third glass that they did that.

But that is not all. A viscountess comes in at the fourth glass and says: "I say also hurrah for Philadelphia, the independence," &c.

I had hoped, as that was at the bottom of the page, that I had landed Benjamin safely and would get him back from these aristocrats to his carriage. But, alas! at the fifth glass Madame de Pernan sang a stanza saying, "All our children will learn from their mothers to love you," &c. [Laughter.]

Look how the aristocracy "went for him." At the sixth glass Count de Tressan, another member of this terrible aristocracy, came to him and sang, "Long live Sarcy! It is Philadelphia," &c. I will not undertake to deliver it all. Then at the seventh glass Count d'Apché—there was, you see, a perfect horde of aristocrats of France after our honest Benjamin in his plain clothes—at the seventh glass—but I dare not trace it any further. I will only say he was a great favorite with the ladies of the court. [Laughter.]

So much, Mr. Chairman, for the model diplomat—and he was that. Do not suppose I intend any depreciation of his eminent ability. But he knew how to cultivate the influences that would strengthen him with the government where he represented his own country; and he did it. He lived like a gentleman. He was a member of society because society was very intelligent at the court where he lived.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. KASSON (to Mr. SPRINGER). We will send you there at the first opportunity if you will imitate Benjamin Franklin; and we will pay you the entire salary. [Laughter.] That is my only hope of educating you sufficiently to know how to vote on these appropriation bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. As my friend represents a prohibition State of the West, I was about to inquire whether when he represented this country abroad he took Dr. Franklin as his model so far as drinking was concerned?

Mr. KASSON. I have no recollection of seven glasses. I might have been more effective and accomplished more for my country if I had taken that seventh glass.

So, Mr. Chairman, you have here in your chosen model an illustration of the fact that your ministers must be intelligent and must maintain their social relations. They must not only be worthy representatives of the principles of their country, but must possess the ability to keep up their rank and to execute the orders of their Government in the presence of the government to which they are sent by all the forms known to diplomatic usage.

Now, is it worth while for us to tear this system all to pieces? Money is not worth as much as it was in 1856. With a given amount there is more difficulty now in meeting the expenses of these positions than when the law was passed. I say to gentlemen on the other side, let us stand upon the old law until the committee having jurisdiction of the subject is satisfied that the law ought to be revised. This is all I rose to say; indeed, it is more than I intended to say. I now gladly leave the bill in charge of the majority of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has five minutes of his time remaining. Does he desire to occupy it?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I care to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. BURNES. I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague on the committee the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT].

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Chairman, the arguments we have heard today, especially those of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], are only confirmatory of the wisdom of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this bill. I had supposed that in defending the bill it would be necessary, especially to meet the arguments of the Secretary of State in opposition to the report of the committee, to refute the position that it is necessary for a representative of our Government abroad to adapt himself to the peculiarities, the prejudices, and the passions of the people there. But it has been clearly shown in the extracts read by the gentleman from Iowa from the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin that his simplicity of manner, his American ideas, his discarding of pomp or any attempt to imitate royalty did not interfere in any respect whatever with the credit due to him as a representative of a free republican government, but on the contrary brought to his feet to do him homage the royalty of the court to which he was accredited.

Sir, had the example set by Franklin been followed by the representatives of this Government abroad, America would be to-day more respected and honored even by crowned heads than she is.

It has been said further that we ought to provide the means to enable our representatives abroad to entertain citizens of the United States who may chance to travel there. Mr. Chairman, the percentage of the people of the United States who are able to travel to foreign countries is very small, and those who do travel there are able to entertain themselves. It comes with a bad grace to say on this floor that out of the Treasury of the United States we should provide money by which our representatives may entertain those who have the means to visit foreign countries simply for the purposes of pleasure or business.

I say the percentage is small. It is exceedingly small compared with the entire population of the country. It is not either the duty or the province of Congress to provide our representative with the means of entertaining these gentlemen who have the means to entertain themselves. We seem to forget in the appropriations we make that every citizen of the country is interested in the money which goes into the Treasury. We seem to forget that the money of the people belongs to the people, and that we have no right whatever to take it out of the Treasury, not even by the crowbar my friend from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] has been so anxious from the beginning of this session of the House to induce this side of the House to use, except it be for legitimate expenditures of the Government and in the interest and for the benefit of the whole people.

We are beginning already, Mr. Chairman, to hear the muttering of trouble involving the business interests which are crushed by reason of the tying up of a surplus in the Treasury. We on this side of the House have believed, and I believe to-day, it is the curse of the Government at this hour. But what is the remedy? Is it to apply the crowbar? Is it to draw this money from the Treasury for the purpose of encouraging extravagant expenditure—for the purpose of wasting the people's substance in other than the legitimate expenses of the Government? Or is it to stop the money in the hands of the people and prevent the surplus from reaching the Treasury? For one, I believe and have believed the true remedy is to begin where the money is found, in the pockets of the people, and leave it there. I for one will never consent, even though it may be for the benefit of people of this country traveling abroad to be entertained by the representative of the Government, that money shall flow for any such purpose.

Let us pay our diplomatic and consular representatives that which is necessary to properly support them abroad in the style in which an American citizen lives at home, and not in a style that shall be commensurate with the extravagance of governments who ruin their people by taking the money which belongs to them for the purpose of feeding their own luxuries and satiating their own appetites. If we here in the United States are to set the example of regal display and regal power and not the simplicity of the administration of a government in the hands of the people, we may as well at once assume that to which everything to-day is tending—the centralization and aggregation of power in the hands of the few to the exclusion of the masses of the people. [Applause.]

Sir, it is said that in this bill we have reduced the appropriations to such an extent we shall place our representation abroad in the hands of men of wealth to the exclusion of poor men. That may be true if our representatives abroad, in disregard of the wishes of the people, forget the simplicity they are expected to exhibit at foreign courts and assume to place themselves in regard to display upon a par and level with the representatives of governments who derive their existence from the substance and to the detriment of their people. But it will not be true when our representatives live inside their legal salary and live as they live at home, following the manners, customs, and habits of the people they are expected to represent at foreign courts.

I for one, Mr. Chairman, may not be imbued with a proper respect for crowned heads and for the display of monarchical institutions. I do not think I am. I was born an American. I was born upon American soil and with American ideas. American institutions, American soil, and American habits are good enough for my style of democracy, and I trust that this attempt upon the part of the Government, by constantly increasing the compensation of our ministers abroad, by constantly increasing the compensation of our consular representatives, to induce them to adapt themselves to the habits and customs of the countries to which they are accredited, or to adopt other than the simplicity of manner and the habits of an American citizen, may be now and forever checked.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that the law of 1856 is the law upon which the compensation of these officers has been predicated from that date to this. It is also said that complaint, early in the history of our Government, was made of improper compensation to our foreign representatives. I had hoped that, under the experiment we had inaugurated in this country of a free system of government, republican ideas, republican habits, republican manners, and republican simplicity would have gained a foothold, and would have wiped out from the imagination of the people of this country the idea that there were some who might stand far above the heads of the people as representatives of the people. Sir, the people of this Government, the people of this country, desire to be represented only by those who come from them; by those who sympathize with them, who are a part of them, and who will represent them even before the majesty of crowned heads in their true character, their true light, their true habits, and their true spirit, as freemen born to rule, able to rule, and willing to rule; who are not ashamed of their simplicity or afraid of crowned heads from whatever source they may come or wheresoever they may be found. [Applause]. Let our consular representatives bear this in mind, and if they do not, then let a Democratic Congress teach them that lesson, and it can not be taught too soon, that they, our agents, as the representatives of the Government, must come to us for their power, must come to us who are the representatives of the people to obtain that which will enable them not simply to represent us, but to obtain that which if they spend in doing otherwise than representing us will be cut off forever from their allowance. [Applause].

Mr. REED. I do not deny but that it is useless to make any argument on this question; but I flatter myself that I am addressing a different audience from that which is to be finally honored by the observations of the gentleman from Ohio who has just taken his seat. He says that our representatives abroad should live as American citizens, and with that simplicity with which American citizens live. What kind of American citizens does the gentleman refer to? Does he mean my constituent that has $300 a year for his income, or the gentleman from Ohio himself, who has $5,000 a year of the people's money which he draws every month to permit him to maintain this state and dignity of an American citizen at this nation's capital? To which does he refer?

For my part, sir, I am heartily tired of this continual talk about this country being a land where the poor man can flourish and the poor man is honored. It is neither a credit nor a discredit to a man to have been born poor. Nothing stands in the way of his advancement. He has an equal chance and fair opportunity in the race with every other citizen; and these repeated declarations are born of a suspicion on the part of some gentlemen that the poor man is not equal to the rich. I maintain that neither in our institutions nor in the practical working of the Government is there any superiority on the part of the rich over the poor man that needs the orations of Congressmen to equalize the citizens of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What it costs a man to live is purely relative. It does not depend upon his happiness, nor does it increase his happiness. I have lived on $300 a year as well as on $5,000 a year, and I was as happy then as I am to-day. What was the difference? The people that I was with were spending different sums of money. That is all that constitutes a difference; and if we purpose sending abroad representatives of this Government we send them for a purpose. We do not send them merely to exemplify to foreign nations how the American citizen lives or may live when he is at home. We send them abroad for far different objects. We send them abroad for the purpose of representing a great country, a country with a revenue of $400,000,000 and a population of 56,000,000. And we send them there that they may associate with the people who are in that country for the simple reason that we shall accomplish our purpose, which is to reach the governing classes of the countries of the Old World.

Now, I do not imagine that any man with $10,000 or $17,000 a year as a foreign minister is any happier or gets any more out of life than we do here on $5,000. He simply lives as the people do about him. That is all there is to it. And Benjamin Franklin, the model cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT], was an example of just such expenditure. And when George Washington was general-in-chief of the armies of the United States he lived like a general-in-chief of the army of a great republic that was to be.

The gentleman from Ohio complains that we make no objection about the increase of salary, but do make objections on account of the decrease of appropriation bills. So we do. This country has always been a country of republican simplicity as to the salaries paid all these officers. And it is a growing country, and as it grows the appropriation bills must grow. Instead of that he and his compeers come here year after year trying not to meet the wants of the country but to reduce the expenditures of a growing people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED. Can the gentleman from Missouri give me any more time? I should like to have one minute.

Mr. BURNES. Take two.

Mr. REED. Of course this House must see it is utterly impossible for me to more than begin on this subject. But I do want to close up what I have to say by referring to just one little item which to me characterizes this bill more thoroughly than anything I can say. Anybody who knows the representation of the United States abroad, or even any one who does not know it, has only to take the salaries which the foreign governments pay to the ministers here, and he can see how far short we are in liberal expenditure of the public money. Why, sir, I remember meeting the chief-justice of Queensland, a little territory of 300,000 inhabitants, and I found he had $2,500 a year more than the Chief-Justice of 56,000,000 of people.

Here is one item in this bill:

For the purpose of enabling the President to provide at the public expense all such stationery, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations.

And that is in a bill that absolutely cuts off all rent for offices. In other words, the careful economy of the gentleman from Missouri provides a sign for the legation, and does not leave any place to stick it. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who has just taken his seat, does not understand this bill; he has not read the bill, or he would not have made the statement with which he concluded his remarks. He will find in this bill every expenditure authorized by existing law is appropriated for.

Before proceeding to call attention to another point I must first notice a remark made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER]. I regretted to hear it, for the simple reason that I have great admiration for his profound ability; but it is not given to any one man to know every subject or to be capable of impressing his views on every question fairly and intelligently. The gentleman from New York in criticising this bill exhibited himself in a position clearly demonstrating that he had never read it and that he did not understand a single provision of it. His criticism was that consuls were reduced from $2,500 to $1,800. He can not find that provision in the bill. It does not exist. The gentleman has not read the bill. He dealt in glittering generalities, as if there were great reductions in the bill. I say here to all these gentlemen there is no reduction so far as the ministers are concerned, except in two particular cases, which I have mentioned.

Why all this talk? Why all this general argument? Why did gentlemen not come down to specific items? I will tell you what is the reason. The reason is that they dare not come down to specific items. The gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, for whose honor and fairness I have unlimited respect, and in whom I have all confidence, called your attention to the consulate at Apia. Did he know that the consul at Apia took $1,138 for contingent expenses, when the whole receipts of his office were less than $100? Did he know that the attention of the Department of State had been called to that expenditure and that an explanation was in order, and that no explanation has been made to this hour?

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me——

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. HITT. The $1,100 about which the gentleman speaks was the salary during the time that officer was waiting for instructions and the long period occupied in going half-way round the world to reach his post.

Mr. BURNES. The statute law of this country expressly provides that pay for thirty days while waiting instructions shall be allowed. I say this pay for thirty days is allowed for waiting instructions.

Mr. HORR. That is not it; the sum spoken of covers trip and all.

Mr. BURNES. The trip is a different arrangement. I say this appears in the report of the Secretary of State as payment while awaiting instructions. What may have been communicated to my esteemed friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] I have nothing to do with. That is a matter between him and others.

This is the first information I have had upon the subject, although the subcommittee called the attention of the Department to it, and received then, and have received since until this moment, no answer. It is in the record of the Department of State that $1,138 was paid to him while awaiting instructions. But let that go.

I come now to my good friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], and when I come to him you will appreciate the delicacy of my position, and I know you will give me your sympathy. It is something to prepare a bill like this against the personal wishes and judgment of such an esteemed and generous gentleman as the gentleman from Iowa. It is something to differ from him, one of the most accomplished diplomates of the country; I may say it is painful.

Yet when he talks about tearing up things, I ask him where in this bill we have torn up anything? There is nothing torn up, nothing changed in the ministerial department, except in reference to two ministers, one to Austria and the other to Italy. Those are changes; there are none others. It is true the triple-headed mission to Greece, Roumania, and Servia is abolished; but there is no change of salaries in the case of envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, or consuls-general.

Mr. KASSON. What I referred to was the reduction made in the very small salaries of secretaries of legation, and the imposition of new duties on our ministers to Chili and Peru, involving largely increased expenditures on their part.

Mr. BURNES. The minister to Chili is not complaining, and I have no doubt that if we allow him his traveling expenses when he goes off across the country to some other of the small republics of South America he will make no sort of objection.

Now, the gentleman, who is very fair, more than fair, and more than liberal—I may say who is just upon all occasions—was scarcely himself in his argument here to-day. What did he tell us? He took up one-half his time in illustrating the mode and manner in which that republican patriot Benjamin Franklin represented this country abroad. I ask him if that is fair? We were then entering upon an experiment, upon a venture in establishing this Republic with three or four millions of people. We were arraying ourselves against almost the combined world so far as our principles of government were concerned, and Benjamin Franklin, loving his country, could not assert that republican dignity and manhood which we all hold so dear now. It was necessary for him to move gently and cautiously. If necessary he had to feel his way, perhaps to beg his way, in diplomatic affairs.

But now the people of the country insist that we shall make our demands upon foreign governments for what is right, asking nothing more and taking nothing less; making our demands in respectful terms, yielding to nothing short of the granting of our just and fair requests. So much for Mr. Franklin.

I come now to another item which has been greatly derided, the item in regard to contingent expenses. Let me call attention to the fact that the express statute law of the United States provides that postage shall be furnished to unsalaried consuls. Mark the language: "Postage shall be furnished to unsalaried consuls." There is a maxim of law which I learned, suggestio unius exclusio alterius. Here is a declaration of the statute that unsalaried consuls shall have postage furnished them.

In another section the statute provides that the expenses to be allowed by the President of the United States shall be such as have been enumerated in this bill and no more. Would the House have the Committee on Appropriations do violence to the statute law of the country? Is it desired that we shall go in the face of the statute law and appropriate for items of expenditure prohibited by the law of the land?

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed by the House for general debate on this bill has expired. The Committee of the Whole will now proceed to the consideration of the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, severally appropriated for the consular and diplomatic service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

Mr. BURNES. As the next paragraph of this bill will be likely to give rise to debate, I have promised that I would not ask the Committee of the Whole to proceed this afternoon to consider the bill beyond the paragraph which has now been read.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I desire to move an amendment to the first paragraph of this bill. I move to strike out the words "Great Britain," and to reduce the sum appropriated by the paragraph by the amount of the salary now paid to the minister to Great Britain, $17,500; that is, to reduce the total from $70,000 to $52,500.

The little time now allowed me under the rules, five minutes, would be of very little use. I desire to say that I will, if there is no objection, add to my speech of a short time ago some things I was prevented from saying for want of time.

I have only to say that I hope we may have a vote in the House by yeas and nays on this amendment, so that we may see whether the services rendered by our minister to Great Britain are such as to deserve a salary of $17,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out "Great Britain," and in lines 10 and 11 strike out "$70,000 and insert $52,500.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, it might be made a matter of serious discussion whether it would be better to conduct all our diplomatic intercourse with foreign countries by means of steam or lightning. But early in the history of this nation we joined the world in exchanging diplomatic relations. Our ministers were sent abroad, and at the period of the Revolution, as all who have read the history of this great nation with care and attention must know, our armies in the field were scarcely less valuable in obtaining the liberties of this country than was our diplomacy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to strike out from this bill the provision for the salary of our minister to Great Britain. On the theory of our Government it is better to consider whether you have the right man in the proper place. Under our Constitution we submit the selection of foreign ministers to the President, with the approval of the Senate, and it is proper that the selection of men to represent us abroad should be intrusted there. I think it would be in wretched taste to select one nation (whatever may be our relations to that nation, whatever may be the feelings of my friend from New York toward that particular people) and break off our relations with that nation in so rude and improper a manner.

The most illustrious of all the Presidents of this country, the grandest man of modern times, when he retired from his high office left his farewell address as a legacy to the American people. In that address he warned us against "entangling alliances" with foreign countries. No part of that address has been held in more sacred regard than this admonition of the Father of his Country. We must avoid alliances with foreign countries. But, Mr. Chairman, the time is now at hand when the 56,000,000 of American people should assert their power before the world, should let it be understood that in the family of nations we are to occupy a place in accordance with our wealth, our intelligence, and our power. And while all other nationalities send their ministers abroad to conduct their affairs, I would be sorry to have my country forget her self-respect by failing to respond to such courtesy in a manner proper and useful and honorable to us. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. It is with no feeling at all toward the British nation that I make this motion. I have expressed my feelings on this subject upon other occasions; but I offer this amendment for the purpose of showing that we disapprove of the conduct of our minister there, and without any reference to our relations with the nation itself.

While I am on the floor, I wish to pay a compliment to my friend who has just taken his seat. Gentlemen talk about Benjamin Franklin! Sir, my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], when he represented this country at the court of Russia, showed what a dignified representative of the United States should be; and on court occasions as on others he wore his citizen's dress. And he was more respected than any man who tried to imitate the bad example of those who had gone abroad as representatives of other nations. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Japan, China, Spain, Brazil, and Mexico, at $12,000 each, in all $60,000.

Mr. BURNES. As the second paragraph of the bill, which has now been read, is likely to provoke some discussion, I will, in fulfillment of promises made to several gentlemen, move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for Alaska; when the Speaker signed the same.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State of the 14th instant, with accompanying papers, relative to the necessity of an appropriation by Congress to enable this Government to execute the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico of July 29, 1882, for the relocation of the monuments marking the boundary line between the two countries, and recommend that the amount asked, $224,556.75, be immediately provided.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 14, 1884.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2334) to release the American Baptist Home Mission Society from the conditions of the sale of the marine-hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Miss.; and

An act (H. R. 3926) amending the Revised Statutes of the United States in respect of official oaths, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the following bills and joint resolution with amendments, in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. 450) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a ponton wagon-bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa;"

A bill (H. R. 2677) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary P. MacBlair;

A bill (H. R. 6092) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 225) to print additional copies of certain publications.

The message further announced the passage of joint resolution (S. 88) providing for the printing the proceedings relative to unveiling the statue of John Marshall, late Chief-Justice, and for other purposes; in which concurrence was requested.

REPORT ON FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1883 be printed, and that there be printed 10,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

MINT AT SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 873) to establish a mint of the United States at Saint Louis, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL GUARD OF ALABAMA.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Militia, reported back favorably joint resolution (H. Res. 244) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to make exchange of tents for Gatling guns with the National Guard of Alabama, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENTON BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. LONG, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5638) to authorize the Benton Bridge Company to build and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLER. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion until I can ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5043) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury, in trust, by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done, as the motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. WELLER. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was recognized, and wish to state my request.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order pending the motion to adjourn and the demand for the regular order of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I hope the motion to adjourn will be voted down.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 44.

Mr. WELLER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

RETIREMENT OF CIRCULATING NOTES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask by unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5043) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury, in trust, by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist upon my demand for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WELLER. I also object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask leave to make an explanation.

Mr. WELLER. I should be glad to accede to the gentleman's request, but I must insist upon my objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. HAMMOND (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CANDLER: Petition of citizens of Towns County, Georgia, for national aid to education—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. C. A. SUMNER: Concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California, relating to the removal of causes pending in the courts of the State of California to the courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. H. G. TURNER: Petition of J. O. Varnedoe and others, of Lowndes County, Georgia, for the passage of the Blair bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. VAN EATON: Petition of over 300 citizens of Wilkinson County, Mississippi, in favor of Federal aid to common schools—to the same committee.

Also, citizens of Hancock County and of C. D. Lancaster, superintendent of education, and citizens of Harrison County, Mississippi, on the same subject—severally to the same committee.

Also, petition of captains and owners of vessels at Ship Island Harbor and in the coasting trade; of citizens of Biloxi; of merchants and citizens of Ocean Springs; of mill-owners, merchants, and citizens of Handsborough; of mill-owners and citizens of Stonewall; and of other Gulf-coast citizens, all asking for the removal of the custom-house from Shieldsborough to Biloxi, Miss.—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 15, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF PUBLICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is his duty to state that yesterday the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], from the Committee on Printing, reported, and the Senate agreed to, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. Res. 235) to print additional copies of certain publications. It appears on examination of the files and the Calendar that the joint resolution had been previously reported on the 30th of April from that committee without amendment; so that the joint resolution was not in possession of the committee and the report was therefore irregular. Officially the Chair supposes it is his duty to know in every instance what bills have been reported and what have not, but the number is so great that it is practically impossible. The Chair calls attention to it in order that the irregularity may not pass into a precedent. The Chair supposes it to have been merely an accident that the committee again reported a bill of which they had no official possession at the time.

Mr. ALLISON. Is any motion required?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think that any motion is required about it.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it stand adjourned until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. The question is on the motion. [Having put the question.] The Chair is in doubt as to the majority of voices, and will divide the Senate.

There were, on a division, ayes 22, noes 12—no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes that the motion requires the action of a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. If it is not too late, I vote in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A single vote does not make any difference in the number making a quorum. No quorum has voted in either case.

Mr. CONGER. My vote would make one more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote would still lack four of a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. It is obvious that there is a quorum present. I ask the Chair to take the vote over again.

Mr. VAN WYCK. To settle the question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am generally paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but as I believe he would vote "yea" upon this question, I will vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Before the result is announced I desire to say that on Monday I agreed to pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] for that day, as I understood it, and yesterday I forgot to observe the pair. I was going to let my vote stand on this question, as I supposed the Senator from Virginia would vote the same way upon it. The Senator from Virginia has just come in.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bayard,	Fair,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Beck,	Frye,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Garland,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Sewell,
Coke,	Gorman,	Pendleton,	Slater,
Conger,	Harris,	Plumb,	Walker,
Cullom,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Williams.

NAYS—15.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Groome,	Maxey,	Wilson.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Anthony,	Hale,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Brown,	Hawley,	McPherson,	Vance,
Camden,	Hill,	Mahone,	Vest,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ingalls,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees.
Colquitt,	Jonas,	Morgan,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,
Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,

So the motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY LINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying report and papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, of the 14th instant, with accompanying papers, relative to the necessity of an appropriation by Congress to enable this Government to execute the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico, of July 29, 1882, for the relocation of the monuments marking the boundary line between the two countries, and recommend that the amount asked, $224,556.75, be immediately provided.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 14, 1884.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a memorial of citizens of Buffalo, N.Y.; a memorial of citizens of Syracuse, N. Y.; a memorial of citizens of Watkins, N. Y.; and a memorial of citizens of Victor, N. Y., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental telegraph. The subscribers to these memorials are, most of them, known to myself; they are citizens of prominence, and their recommendations are entitled to the very highest consideration. I move that the memorials lie on the table, as the bill has been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented resolutions adopted by Mansfield Post, No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, Mansfield, Tioga County, Pennsylvania, favoring recommendations made by the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to pensions; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of Jabez H. Gill, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1399 and House bill No. 4670, for the relief of William C. Dodge; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a memorial of citizens of Deposit, N. Y., and a memorial of citizens of Canton, N. Y., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental telegraph; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I present a petition signed by Mark D. Flower, E. W. Hurant, and a number of others who have been engaged in steamboat navigation on the upper Mississippi River, and contributed for years to the large fund accumulated from the payment of hospital dues and licenses, praying that Congress appropriate from that fund the sum of $100,000 to erect a snug harbor or seamen's home on or near the Government island of Rock Island, as a home for aged, needy, and disabled seamen. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] handed me the petition to present in his absence. He is necessarily absent to-day. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Poole & Hunt, George H. Cairnes, and sundry other citizens of the city of Baltimore, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1924, providing for the reorganization of the Patent Office into a separate department; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BECK. I present the memorial of John Means, John F. Hager, and a large number of citizens of Ashland, Ky., remonstrating against the establishment of a governmental telegraph for reasons set forth in the memorial. I am not sure whether the memorial should be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads or the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported on the telegraph bill.

Mr. BECK. Then I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a petition of the Cincinnati (Ohio)

Typographical Union, No. 3, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics, which is now before the Senate. This petition is rather in the nature of a letter to myself and my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], but it evidently was intended as a petition to this body. I ask that it be received as such, and ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be received, if there be no objection, and laid on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present the memorial of Leo Ebert & Co. and 125 other citizens of Ironton, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of what is commonly known as the postal telegraph bill. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the memorial of C. T. Hitchings and others, residents of Warren, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of any measures relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials, &c.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6094) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, in connection with the report on the pension appropriation bill, submitted a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, concerning the reduction of the number of pension agencies and the compensation of agents; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, in connection with the pension appropriation bill, submitted a paper from the Commissioner of Pensions to accompany his letter on House bill 6094, being estimates made by the Treasurer of the United States of the probable cost to his office of paying all pensions and keeping accounts thereof, provided that all preliminary work previous to the drawing of checks should be done in some other bureau; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5259) granting a pension to Julia A. Ross, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. The affidavit of William T. Hundley sustaining his case for special relief was referred to the Committee on Pensions. The affidavit refers to a bill alleged to be pending before the Committee on Pensions. No such bill has ever been referred to the committee. The committee desire to be discharged from its further consideration. We have also made inquiry and find that no bill has been introduced in the Senate for his relief. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the affidavit.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1065) granting an increase of pension to George F. Dresser, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1337) granting an increase of pension to Lucy Le G. Jeffers, to submit a report thereon, but the committee make no recommendation. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1180) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary T. Barnes, have instructed me to report it back without recommendation, and to ask that it be laid upon the table; and I am also instructed by the same committee to report back the bill (H. R. 1406) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary T. Barnes without recommendation, and to ask that it be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Illinois as to the nature of the report, whether favorable or adverse.

Mr. CULLOM. The committee make no recommendation. They report both bills back and ask that the Senate bill be laid upon the table and that the House bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1463) for the relief of David Compropst, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary J. French, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. SLATER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1751) for the relief of William R. Browne, to report it back adversely. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SLATER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1218) for the relief of William R. Browne, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1109) for the relief of John B. Lowry, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL AND COTTON CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, have instructed me to report it back with sundry amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to consider that bill at this time. The Committee on Appropriations have given it full consideration. We have stricken out all the clauses that indicated any liability on the part of the United States, and the only amendments that we have made to the body of the bill are in the nature of restrictions to guard the expenditure and the liability. I hope that the Senate will now consider it. It is very important that early action should be taken.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless some Senator desires otherwise, I suggest that we consider the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as the reading of the bill proceeds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was proposing, after the reading of the preamble was concluded, to ask the consent of the Senate to that course.

Mr. ALLISON. We propose to strike out most of the preamble, so that I do not think it is very important to read that further.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the preamble had better be read and the bill also read at length as it came from the House, and that subsequently the amendments of the committee may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objecting to the suggestion made, the reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will now be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 10, after the word "determine," to insert "and in accordance with the provisions of this act;" so as to read:

That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a loan to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be used and employed by the board of management thereof to augment and enhance the success of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition in such manner as said board of management may determine, and in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, after the word "and," to strike out the word "treasurer" and insert "secretary," and in line 13, after the word "Exposition," to insert "authorized by order of said board;" so as to read:

Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States on the drafts of the president and secretary of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition authorized by order of said board, one-third of the amount immediately after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, after the word "in," to insert "to the said board;" at the end of line 16 to insert "contributors to and shareholders of the;" and in line 18, after the word "thereafter," to insert:

Upon being satisfied that each of the prior payments has been faithfully applied as required by this act; and for this purpose he shall have free access to the accounts and all transactions of said board;

So as to read:

Upon being satisfied that $500,000 has been contributed and paid in to the said board for the purposes of the exposition by the contributors to and shareholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and the remainder in four monthly payments thereafter, upon being satisfied that each of the prior payments has been faithfully applied as required by this act; and for this purpose he shall have free access to the accounts and all transactions of said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 19, after the word "expended," to insert "or liability or indebtedness of any kind incurred;" in line 21, to strike out the words "secured by subscription" and insert "paid in by the subscribers;" and after the word "stock," in the same line, to insert the word "and;" so as to read:

That no greater amount shall be expended or liability or indebtedness of any kind incurred upon buildings, grounds, and preparations than the aggregate sum that may be paid in by the subscribers to the capital stock and by donations and the amount of the loan provided herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 29, after the word "stock," to insert "or contributors;" so as to read:

That in the distribution of the amounts that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payments of the current expenses of administration the amount of the appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits or assets shall be paid to the holders of said stock or contributors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 31, after the word "obligation," to strike out "for" and insert "created or incurred by;" in line 33, after the word "or," to insert "for;" in line 34, before the word "amount," to strike out "foregoing;" and after the word "amount" to strike out the words "that may be;" so as to read:

That the Government of the United States shall not, under any circumstances, be liable for any debt or obligation created or incurred by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, or its board of management, or for any sum whatever in addition to the amount appropriated by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 35, after the word "space," to insert the words "to be determined by the President of the United States;" and in line 37, after the word "charge," to insert "by said board;" so as to read:

And that adequate space, to be determined by the President of the United States, for such exhibits as the Government of the United States may see proper to make at said exposition shall be furnished free of all charge by said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "the," in line 38, to strike out the words "treasurer of the said exposition until after he and the president of the same;" and to insert "said board of management of said exposition until after the president, secretary, and a majority of the members of said board;" so as to read:

That no sum shall be paid to the said board of management of said exposition until after the president, secretary, and a majority of the members of said board shall have executed a bond, with good and solvent security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $300,000, to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and the faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 45, after the word "expenditures," to insert "and liabilities;" so as to read:

And for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures and liabilities as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration, said repayment in no case to exceed the loan herein appropriated and provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the receipt of the loan herein made, or any part thereof, by said board of management shall be a full acceptance of all the trusts, conditions, provisions, and obligations of this act by the said board of management and by the corporation created under the laws of the State of Louisiana, and designated as the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 11 I move to strike out the word "Treasurer" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States on the drafts of the president and secretary of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was simply an oversight in the subcommittee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to amend the bill, in line 3, by striking out the words "one million dollars" and inserting "$500,000." That is the amount to be subscribed by the promoters of the enterprise, and I think if the Government does as much as the individual supporters they ought to be satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. I do not think that $1,000,000 is an excessive amount, and it is very well secured. I think that amount will be necessary to make this exposition the kind of success that the people of the country want it to be, and the loan made by the Government will be reimbursed. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I place my opposition to the amendment on a little different ground from that of the Senator from Missouri. I have not been able to satisfy myself entirely that this money will be repaid; but I believe this is an exhibition of a character which the Government can afford to aid, and if it is to aid it at all it ought to aid it sufficiently to remove every reasonable obstacle to success. There are chances, and I think a majority of chances, that the Government will be repaid the money. I think it safe to say that under any ordinary circumstances it will be repaid, and at all events the shortage will not be considerable.

This matter has taken a large hold on the public mind. There are considerations in it which are undoubtedly of very great consequence to the entire American people. There will be assembled at New Orleans at the exposition probably more representatives of the commercial interests of the states of South America than have ever been assembled on the American continent anywhere. New Orleans is especially favorably located with a view to reaching that class of interests and that class of business.

I have myself great hopes of what will come to the supremacy of North American interests in the South American portion of our continent growing out of this exhibition. I know also that the people of the entire temperate zone of this country are coming to look upon it with a great deal of interest.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that when we made an appropriation in the nature of a loan to the Centennial Exhibition of 1876 we gave a million and a half dollars, and there was no objection to that. This proposes only a million, and certainly it is not too much.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not make any comparison at all. I am willing to vote the amount proposed in the bill. In fact, I do not want to make any comparison, because I do not want to do a thing to-day which I may feel bound to repeat to-morrow. Therefore I do not quote the Philadelphia Centennial in my vote, but I let the New Orleans Centennial stand by itself. I might be entirely unwilling to-morrow to vote a dollar in aid of a similar exhibition anywhere. But this matter has got to a point where I think the public expectation has been aroused, and the chances for benefit derived not only to the Southern people but to all of the people in this country are sufficient to warrant us in making this experiment. I believe it will do more to intermingle the people of the whole United States, that it will do more to give life to all the currents of trade, especially in the Southern States, to open up new markets for the Northern States, to bring us into accord with the people of the states of South America, as I have said, and generally stimulate the movements of the people and their business interests throughout the entire country, than any other thing probably that we could do at this time.

To my great surprise I found that a large interest was awakened in the exhibition in the State of Kansas. That is a State somewhat remote, a State that has business of its own to do, that has a market for its own products West; but still I find that our people are looking forward with a great deal of interest to this exhibition. Kansas will have a display there of its products which will be, I have no doubt, creditable to that State, and following that display will go thousands and even tens of thousands of people, and I think that will be true of all the States of the Mississippi Valley. I have no doubt that the feeling will be contagious and that it will spread to the States East, if it has not already done so. The people of New Jersey, one of the greatest manufacturing States, probably the greatest in proportion to population in the Union, will find it to their interest (and I never knew a New Jerseyman who was not keen for those things that concerned his pocket) to go there and get a large space in which to exhibit the fruits of the fertility, the genius, the energy, the capital of that State, and they will get all this money back, not only the money they invest in it directly but all their proportion of this million dollars.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the appropriation to be given by the Government should be adequate or it should not be given at all. I am satisfied that if the gentleman from New Jersey who moves to cut down this appropriation to $500,000 would make an estimate and survey of this business he would find that $500,000 is totally inadequate for the purpose. The conception of this matter of a world's exposition was a dream in the beginning, and really its most sanguine friends did not suppose it would assume the proportions it has, and now, after the work in New Orleans and in the State of Louisiana, with the official report that has been made, it is certain that this bids fair to be one of the greatest expositions not only on this continent but in the world anywhere. I say to the Senator from Kansas that now every State, I believe, and almost every Territory, has manifested in the most substantial and unequivocal way its intention to be represented at the exposition.

The Senator from Texas suggested that we gave $1,500,000 to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. If there is any utility in this exposition at New Orleans, judging from present appearances, it is going to outstrip even that in its importance and in its results to the industries of this country and the civilized world that visit it. Not only the State of Kansas is alive, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, but we hear voices from all the Union expressing interest in it. We heard the other day a petition read here, presented by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], asking that this appropriation be made, and nothing has occurred in the Senate during this session that has given me more satisfaction than to hear the reading of that petition.

This is an effort to bring together the States and the Territories of this Union and all the powers of the world that are inclined to come forward and be represented there. Mexico has already appropriated $200,000, and she comes with General Diaz at the head of a commission to represent her. She has asked for large ground there to make her exhibit. The whole world is to be there. I say it is one of the most cheering signs and symptons that have taken place in this country for many years. Five hundred thousand dollars, let me say to my friend from New Jersey, will be totally inadequate to meet this demand. The bill is guarded in its restrictions and in its requirements more than any bill ever presented to Congress on such a subject. It has undergone the scrutiny of the entire Committee on Appropriations and long and tedious investigation, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is always acute and alert as to these matters, has given it his careful attention, and he reports that it is perfect in this respect.

I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not insist upon the amendment. The United States is in no danger in reference to getting back this million of dollars, and so far as I am concerned if we were to give the money I do not think we should be doing anything amiss. But suppose the return of the money is not secured, suppose this to be a donation; none better, none more valuable could be made. The results of this exposition will be in every respect worth to the Government, to the people of the States, to the States, many fold more than this sum. It is a great national and international enterprise, and its cost now need not be calculated and ciphered.

All the States of the Union will be represented there. It is the money of the States that is contributed. There are over $60,000,000 now in the Treasury of the United States derived from the cotton tax lying there idle. That tax may be said to be part of the revenues of the Government, but its proceeds now amounting to $63,000,000 are in the Treasury, and the constitutionality of the levy of that tax was questioned, and it was only affirmed by a divided bench by the Supreme Court of the United States. In alluding to the cotton tax I do not pass any judgment upon it in any way, but merely refer to it to show that as this product has yielded this revenue now in the Treasury, this small sum can well be loaned out of this revenue to celebrate the centennial of this article of the world's commerce that cuts such an important figure in its history. We ask now but for a loan of a small part of the sixty-odd million dollars realized from this great product of the country to make the country glad once more, that we may meet in commerce and trade, in social commerce, exchange our views upon great matters of civilization, exhibit our products, and infuse new life and new energy into the industries of the country.

The enterprise is national in its conception, it is national in its execution, it is national in its effects, and I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I propose to vote for this appropriation, but I regret that the Senator from Arkansas should have referred to the cotton tax as a reason why it should be voted at the present time. If the Senator had read the report of the Treasury Department he would have discovered that more than 90 per cent. of that tax was paid by northern people. It did not come out of the Southern people at all. So far as the constitutionality of the tax is concerned, I will not take up time to discuss that question now. I have not a particle of doubt but that it was constitutional, and I believe to-day that it would be for the interest of the Southern States to have that tax reimposed. In that way they would not only obtain the monopoly of the business in raw cotton but would also obtain the monopoly of the manufacture of yarns and all ordinary cotton goods.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggested to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] when he was on the floor that we had loaned to the Centennial Exposition a million and a half dollars. I did so for this purpose: I was at that time a member of the Senate. Party excitement in the country and estrangement of the sections were then very much more intense than now. I not only voted for that appropriation, but stated my reasons in favor of it, believing it to be a great measure in the interest of the restoration of fraternal feeling among all sections of the country, in addition to the great advantages that would result to the commerce of the country. The outcome was that the appropriation succeeded, and I have been entirely satisfied ever since with the course I then pursued.

The results of the Centennial Exposition were good every way. The people from every section of the Union met there face to face. Social intercourse did very much to soften the asperities growing out of the war. The display of the United States, agricultural, manufacturing, mechanical, mining, brought in contact with those of other nations, gave us just reason to be proud of the energy, enterprise, and intelligence of our people.

In reference to this proposed exposition, I take pride in saying of my own State that our Legislature has made ample provision for being represented at the exposition. A State commissioner has been appointed by the governor in obedience to law; every Congressional district has its Congressional commissioner; every county has its county commissioner; and the whole State is alive to the importance of this great exposition, and that State will present, in my judgment, a display at the exposition at New Orleans that will be a pride and a pleasure to every citizen not only of Texas but of the United States, because it will show how rapidly this great State is developing, and how greatly it is adding to the general wealth of this great country. What I say of that State in respect to the interest of its people in this enterprise is equally true of the Southern States generally. The whole country there is alive to the importance of this grand enterprise, and as was said by the Senator from Kansas, his State away back west of the Mississippi River and off the line of any direct communication with New Orleans by water has also taken hold of this matter and will be well represented at the exposition. I like to see such energy and business sagacity. The effect will be to produce a spirit of emulation, and the people of each State will strive to make a better display than the people of any other State. Out of this honorable emulation great good to the whole country will result.

I would rejoice if every State in the Union is represented, and that the people of every State will exhibit the very best of all their products.

The amount of $1,000,000 is not too large. If we intend to do a manly thing in the way of aiding these people in their laudable effort, let us do it in a manly way. I do not believe $1,000,000 is any too much to help in this great enterprise which greatly encourages commerce among the States of the Union. The Republic of Mexico has made ample provision, by an appropriation of $200,000 I think, to be represented at the exposition, and has placed the control of it under General Porfirio Diaz, a great if not the greatest statesman to-day in that republic.

Mr. President, the importance of securing the trade of Mexico and Central and South America can not be overestimated. We must have an outlet for our surplus manufactured productions, or the shutting down of mills, the placement of workmen on half-time, the reduction of wages, and strikes, will inevitably follow. We can not hope for an extensive market for our manufactured products in Europe. The most inviting field is the country south of us. Every step, therefore, which we may take in that direction is wisely taken. The appropriation asked is but a trifle compared with the results to follow. The passage of this bill will insure the representation of not only Mexico, but of many States of South America as well, at this great exhibition.

The able and efficient director-general, Maj. A. E. Burke, is seeking to extend the interest in the exposition to the South American States and have them represented, and I hope and believe that he will succeed. This will aid in enabling this great country to grasp at an early day the trade and commerce of all the countries lying south of the United States. If this exposition were to aid to any considerable degree in that regard, certainly the amount of money that we propose to loan is but a trifle compared with the grand results to flow from it.

Is it not entirely within our reach, by this and other wise legislation, to secure this great trade? Why should we stand idly by and see its rich fruits gathered by England, France, and Germany?

With our wonderful facilities by rail and river of concentrating rapidly at any point, our people can be brought together at New Orleans. The leading products of each State are exhibited in proximity to the leading products of all other States. We can thus form a just estimate of trade relations. Each community can thus tell what every other community have to sell and what they need to buy. And, I repeat what I said when the bill for an appropriation for the Centennial Exposition was before the Senate, "Let the people become better aquainted with each other, and that want of confidence which is the foundation and cornerstone of all the trouble there is in this country at this time will disappear." That exposition had the exact effect I anticipated, and this will rivet the good work thus happily begun.

The opinion has been expressed that the million dollars now voted will certainly be refunded. I hope so; but if this should prove a mistake—and its success depends upon the receipts of the enterprise over expenditures—still I would regard it as money wisely expended if it should turn out that it is never refunded.

Mr. President, this is a grand movement in a section not many years since devastated. Come and see us and let us show you the wonderful recuperative powers and indomitable energy, guided by intelligence, of our Southern people.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I believe I had the honor to present the only petition that has been presented in favor of this appropriation. It came from my own State, was signed by the governor and several important officials of the State, and was also signed by the leading manufacturers of my own city, manufacturers of cotton fabrics. These gentlemen have no special interest in Louisiana, no special interest in this exposition except one of pure business. They know perfectly well that the only place for the exportation of the textile fabrics of this country in the future is to Mexico and the South American and Isthmian states. They know that they can not compete in textile fabrics with France and Germany and England in their own countries. It is an impossibility. But here are all the South American countries and Mexico and the Isthmus waiting for us to send our goods there. They never will manufacture such goods, at least they will not in fifty years, and our manufacturers see through this exposition a good way for business, and nothing else under the sun, and that is why, without any sentiment, but purely as a matter of business, they ask that this appropriation shall be made.

I believe fully that under this appropriation for this exposition (which undoubtedly will be a success), in connection with what may be done for the establishment of shipping lines between here and South American ports under legislation which this Congress will certainly enact into law, we are to see within four years a business commence and grow with great rapidity between our country and the South American States. I am for the appropriation for that reason. I would be for it if I knew the exposition would not pay a dollar back. In fact, it is very immaterial to me whether it does or not. I hope the amount will not be cut down at all. It is the amount that is asked for, and it is the amount which seems to be adequate.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the interest felt in the State of Kansas in this matter was so great that the Legislature at its special session last month made an appropriation directly from the treasury of the State of $7,000, and provided for the appointment of a State commission which should have charge of a representation of the industries, the products, and the civilization of that State at New Orleans. Irrespective therefore of my personal views on this subject, I consider myself instructed by the action of my State as to my own course in this body on the amount of the appropriation.

Besides this, many boards of trade, the authorities of many cities, personal friends engaged in business, have addressed me, insisting upon the very great importance of the proposed exposition and asking my personal efforts to assist in the passage of this bill.

The Senator from Missouri suggested in the course of his remarks that there was ample provision for the security of the proposed loan. I doubt that, Mr. President. I do not vote for this as a loan. I believe it will be a donation, and I vote for it with that understanding, cheerfully; and while I shall be very glad if the returns of the exposition are such that the money can be refunded to the Treasury, yet I believe that if the Government expends the entire amount without the return of one dime, it will be bread cast upon the waters that will return to us after many days.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I made the motion for the reduction of this amount, as I supposed that we should never get a cent of it back. Judging from my experience as a business man and a transportation man, in view of the location of this proposed exposition, I would give it as my judgment that none of this money will ever come back. If the exposition were to be located at a central point like Saint Louis, or Chicago, or Cincinnati, where the surrounding population is very dense and where the modes of communication are so frequent that large masses of people could be transported there, I would say that the money might come back, but at New Orleans it is almost an impossibility. The people that come from Mexico and other southern countries will be a very small drop in the bucket. It requires a large mass of population to make an exposition of this kind pay. Therefore I moved to reduce the amount, as I thought $500,000 was enough for the Government to contribute to what is practically to be a local exposition, for the great mass of the people of the Northern States never heard of it until to-day. I never knew of it until I saw the bill on my table.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey would be willing, I suppose, from what he says, to make a donation of $500,000 in aid of this exposition. His amendment does not provide for making it an absolute donation, but from his remarks I suppose he would be willing to do that. Now there is some chance of the Government receiving back all it loans for this purpose, and as a mere business proposition, looking at it in its business phase, I would rather vote for the bill as it stands, loaning a million dollars, than to vote $500,000 as an absolute gift.

I should regard it as a great misfortune if this appropriation should be cut down. The managers of this exposition have asked for the loan of a million dollars. In their calculations they regard this sum as being necessary; and for the reasons which have been given, and many others which might be given, I think the Government can not dispose of its surplus revenues to a better purpose than in this way, even if it should not get back all the money advanced, or even half of it.

For my part, I would go as far as the Senator from Kansas for such an exposition as this and for all such expositions where the productions of the world are to be brought together for purposes of comparison, where the people of the States of this Union and of foreign States go for the purpose of comparing the productions of the various countries and the interchange of sentiment and of thought. I think that the Government ought to aid all such expositions.

The influence of the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition has been felt ever since that exposition took place. It gave a stimulus to manufactures, it enabled our people to know what the productions of the various States were, and of the various countries of Europe that sent manufactured articles and other articles there for exhibition. The people of my State have expressed themselves very clearly and forcibly upon this subject. I think they are universally in favor of making this appropriation, and I shall vote for it with great pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations considered this question of amount very carefully, and many suggestions were made with reference to a reduction of the sum appropriated by the House bill; but on statements made to the committee we became satisfied that this sum at least would be required if the exhibition was to go on upon the scale proposed. Of course the board of management can contract the exposition to meet the $500,000 suggested by the Senator from New Jersey if we allow no more; but we have gone so far in this business that I think we are reasonably bound to make an appropriation of $1,000,000 in the manner proposed in this bill. It is the first step generally that costs. A year ago or more we passed a law brief in words but very comprehensive in character. We bound this Government in every possible way to take part in this exposition, to invite foreign governments, and we called it an international exposition. We did everything except agree to appropriate money. There was an express reservation in the law we passed that no money should be paid for the purpose of carrying on the exposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was stated on the floor, but not in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will read the section:

SEC. 7. That no compensation for services shall be paid to the commissioners or other officers provided by this act from the Treasury of the United States; and the United States shall not be liable for any of the expenses attending such exhibition, or by reason of the same.

So that after committing the Government of the United States in a most thorough way to this exposition we put an addendum here saying that the Government would provide none of the expense. Now we find that this exposition will be an absolute failure unless the Government does come in and give aid. I need not recite the causes of this failure. In the first place the people where this exposition is located are not able to subscribe a sufficient sum of money to carry on the exposition. After raising half a million dollars for this purpose, the flood in the Mississippi River came upon these people and swept away from them many hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars of property, so that they find themselves now with a great exposition on hand with only about five or six or perhaps seven hundred thousand dollars of subscriptions to carry it on.

We have endeavored by this bill, with the amendments suggested, to prevent this board of management from incurring any obligation whatever. We have restricted, so far as it is possible to restrict, the expenditures preparatory to this exposition to the subscriptions and to the amount of this loan, and we have created practically in this board of management a trust whereby they shall not incur obligations to be paid out of the current receipts of the exposition. So we expect this board of management (six of whom, by the way, have been appointed by the President of the United States) to start this exposition on the 1st day of November, or whatever day it shall begin, without any obligation whatever; and, if so, if they shall do this, then the question of the return of this amount of $1,000,000 or any portion of the $1,000,000 will depend wholly upon the success of the exhibition after it shall begin.

I am not very sanguine myself that the whole of this money will be returned, but if this exposition is managed as it ought to be, I believe a large portion of it can and will be returned to the United States; but whether that be true or not the obligation rests upon the board of management under this bill not to take the statements of Senators on this floor that this money is not to be returned, but to so manage it, if they can, as to return the whole of it to the United States. That is the obligation here, and I, for one, do not wish this board of management to understand that we nominally are giving them a loan which they can use at their own discretion and pleasure without reference to the question of its return.

That is the situation in which we are placed to-day. I would have been glad to see other safeguards thrown around this bill, but I could for myself see no other way of amending the bill that would leave the board of management free to carry on the exposition, and therefore I trust the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey will not prevail, as I think the amount provided for here is necessary to the success of this exposition.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have been out of the Senate and have listened to none of the debate that has taken place thus far upon this bill. I have a general knowledge of the purpose of the appropriation, and I assume that the bill will pass practically without opposition. I presume that it will do so now, and I only wish to say a word indicative of my sense of the importance of the exposition as an educational measure in itself, and as one calculated to develop the material interests and advance the general prosperity of the country.

I had some occasion to observe within a few months past the rising interest of our fellow-citizens of the South in this specific enterprise. I found in the Gulf States many prominent citizens who were interesting themselves to, as it seemed to me, a quite extraordinary degree in the success of the Cotton Centennial, as they call it, which is an enterprise much larger than might be indicated simply by its name; but an enterprise which appears to have taken hold upon the affections and the feelings of the people as an opportunity which they are to have of giving to the rest of the country and to the world some indication of the resources of their section of country, and a demonstration of their capacity in the development of their industries and the general wealth of the nation. I think the radical impulse was one of patriotism on the part of the Southern gentlemen with whom I came in contact, and I should feel myself that it was a personal loss and a national loss if this enterprise failed to develop and to be consummated in accordance with their anticipations. A million of dollars given by the National Government outright would, in my belief, be a far more appropriate thing to do than the contribution which we are making with hedgings about that some time or other we may get this money back. It is better to give it in this way than not to do it at all; and it is indispensable, without doubt, that they should have this assistance in order that the enterprise may succeed at all; but if we had to make choice between the success of the enterprise and a voluntary contribution of this million or a larger sum with no expectation of the return of any portion of it, I think it would be national economy to give the money outright.

I trust that this bill, with such modifications or such safeguards as the committee may have seen fit to report in connection with it, will pass and that it will pass unanimously, not grudgingly, but by a unanimous vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the preamble. The Committee on Appropriations recommend sundry amendments to the preamble, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out the fifth paragraph of the preamble, as follows:

Whereas many of the governments so invited have accepted such invitations, and are making preparations to embrace the courtesy so extended to them, thereby rendering proper arrangements for the coming ceremonies on the part of the United States a matter of honor and good faith; and.,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the last word "and" in the sixth paragraph of the preamble, and also the seventh paragraph of the preamble, as follows:

Whereas all of the inducements which were involved and embodied in the request that Congress should grant the necessary aid to secure the success of the Centennial Exposition of Philadelphia are re-enforced by the progress and development of many States and Territories that were unable to avail of the beneficent policy inaugurated by the Government at Philadelphia, but are now desirous of an equal opportunity to display their agricultural, commercial, and industrial resources to the world; and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the eighth paragraph of the preamble, as follows:

Whereas the stockholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition have furnished, to aid in the completion of the said enterprise, $500,000, and have determined to increase the same to $1,000,000 by a vote of a majority of said stockholders, and are now engaged in obtaining the same, and the said city of New Orleans has, in its corporate capacity, contributed the sum of $100,000 to secure the success of this national and international undertaking, and it is but just and equable that the Government whose people are to be universally affected and benefited by the said contributions and donations of these said citizens should lend its aid and credit to the said enterprise in a specific form calculated to enhance its dignity and capacity to accomplish the objects in view, to wit, the development and prosperity of the United States, and also because the results of the centennial celebration of 1876 have illustrated the wisdom of such national action: Therefore.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble as amended.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the title so as to make it read:

A bill to make a loan in aid of the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill as amended and passed be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 51) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande River between the cities of Eagle Pass, Tex., and Piedras Negras, Mexico; and

A bill (S. 664) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande River between the cities of Laredo, Tex., and Nueva Laredo, Mexico.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2636) for the relief of Lieut. John C. Geyer;

A bill (H. R. 4977) to authorize the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company to a point on the military lands at Fortress Monroe, Va.; and

A bill (H. R. 6762) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected between the north and south line of the county of Douglas, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 153) providing a civil government for Alaska; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2218) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Newport, Ky.; which was read by its title, and referred to the Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2219) granting a pension to M. V. B. Winkler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2220) granting a pension to J. G. Crawford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2221) granting a pension to Mary A. Henry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2222) granting a pension to James H. Reid; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2223) granting a pension to Lemuel J. Bennett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2224) to prohibit speculation by officers of national banking associations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1283) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Richard Johnson be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

FAILURES OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to examine into the causes of the failure of such of the national banks in the city of New York as have suspended business in the month of May, 1884, and report whether said failures have to any and what extent resulted from any violation of the laws regulating their conduct, or from giving certificates upon drafts, or by their acceptances of drafts or other commercial paper drawn upon them, directly or indirectly, in evasion of or in violation of the laws, and whether any other national banks in New York city have been engaged since July 12, 1882, in the violation or invasion of the laws regulating their conduct. And that said committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and to visit the city of New York, and to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath.

That the expenses incurred by said committee in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to be audited and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that that be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objecting to the consideration of the resolution, it will be printed and lie over.

Mr. MORRILL. I think if the Senator from Delaware will allow it to be referred to the Committee on Finance——

Mr. BAYARD. It had better be printed and lie over, I think, without referring it.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to be heard on the question of reference when it comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present consideration of the resolution is objected to and it goes over.

PRINTING OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Yesterday an order was entered for the printing of 200 copies of the correspondence relative to the Ward claims and the claim of Charles E. Hill against China. I find on examination that that number will not be sufficient. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which that order was passed, with a view of amending it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moves that the vote of the Senate taken yesterday on adopting the resolution referred to by him be reconsidered. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That 200 copies of the correspondence respecting the Ward claims and the claim of Charles E. Hill against China, transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States, May 7, 1884, in response to Senate resolution of March 12, 1884, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the order.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move now to amend the order by striking out "two" and inserting "six," so as to make the number of copies 600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The order as amended was adopted.

LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions that order of business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII, beginning at Order of Business 287, which is Senate bill 1017.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1017) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements, and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, in section 1, line 11, after the word "lottery," to strike out the words:

Any person violating the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine for each offense of not more than five hundred nor less than two hundred dollars, with costs of prosecution, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Any person engaged in publishing a newspaper as owner or part owner, proprietor, general manager, or superintending agent, president, or other officer connected therewith, and any person engaged in conducting a lottery as owner or part owner, and any person connected therewith as superintendent, manager, agent, or in any other capacity, violating the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine for each offense of not less than $200, with costs of prosecution, or imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was the bill read?

Mr. MORGAN. It has not been read, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read on the 29th of April, the Chair is informed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was the report read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report was not read, the Chair is informed.

Mr. COCKRELL. That seems to be a pretty important bill, and I see there are dissenting views. I think under the circumstances, as there are views of the majority and minority of the committee, that we had better have them read probably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. WILSON from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, February 26, 1884, but before concluding was interrupted by

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 1340) to establish and maintain a bureau of labor statistics.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILMINGTON, DEL.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow me to call up and have passed a bill for the erection of a public building at Wilmington, Del.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will observe that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is entitled to the floor, having yielded last evening to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask him to allow this bill to be laid aside informally. I will state my reason.

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield; but I do not assume the control of the pending bill by any means. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has control of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I should be very glad to accommodate the Senator from Delaware, but I would not like to take any step that would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not desire to displace it, but ask that it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware to lay aside informally the unfinished business? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAYARD. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1885.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1885) for the erection of a public building at Wilmington, Del.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FARLEY. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the motion will be withdrawn. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was about to proceed with his remarks upon the pending bill. It is now only 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MORGAN. It will be no inconvenience to me for the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business if the interests of the country require it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 15, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 6092) making an appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1885, with Senate amendments thereto, was taken from the Speaker's table, ordered to be printed with the amendments of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BRANCH HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4696) to authorize the location of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors in either the State of Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, or Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIEUT. JOHN C. GEYER.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2636) for the relief of Lieut. John C. Geyer, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, and is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $351.17 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lieut. John C. Geyer, late of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for his pay while serving as adjutant of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for two months and twenty-seven days, $420.50, less pay as sergeant-major for said period, $69.33, which service he was not paid for in full for the reason that the commissioned officer whom he was appointed to succeed was a prisoner of war in the custody of the enemy and could not be mustered out of the service, the said John C. Geyer performing the duties of adjutant of his regiment for the time named and receiving the pay only of sergeant-major for the said time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONNOLLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLS—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7010) relating to wills in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE AT EAGLE PASS.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 51, to authorize the construction of a bridge for the transportation of street-cars, wagons, and other vehicles, horses and other animals, and pedestrians, over the Rio Grande River between the cities of Eagle Pass, Tex., and Piedras Negras, Mexico, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Rio Grande Bridge and Tramway Company, a corporation organized and created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, own, maintain, and operate a street-railway bridge over the Rio Grande River between the city of Eagle Pass, Tex., and the city of Piedras Negras, in the State of Coahuila, Mexico, at such point as may be most convenient to said corporation, to unite and connect the street-railroad to be constructed by them in the said city of Eagle Pass with any street-railroad that may be constructed by any person or company in the said city of Piedras Negras, and to build and lay on and across said bridge ways for the passage of animals, foot-passengers, and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of which said corporation may charge a reasonable toll, which charge shall be subject to reasonable revision and regulation, from time to time, by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be built of good, substantial material, and of such strength and dimensions as may be sufficient to render the passage of all such vehicles, animals, and persons as are herein mentioned perfectly safe at any and all times.

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall not interefere with the free navigation of said river, and in case of any litigation arising from an obstruction or an alleged obstruction to the free navigation thereof, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be tried before the circuit or district court of the United States for the State of Texas having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to withdraw the authority and power conferred by this act, in case the free navigation of said river shall at any time be substantially or materially obstructed by said bridge, or for any other reason, and to direct the removal or necessary modifications thereof at the cost and expense of the owners of said bridge; and Congress may at any time alter, repeal, or amend this act. The right is reserved to the United States for the establishment of a postal telegraph across the said bridge.

SEC. 5. That the consent of the Mexican State of Coahuila and of the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

Mr. BEACH. This bill I have examined since it was read on a former occasion. It contains the usual safeguards provided by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume the gentleman who presented an objection on a former occasion has examined the bill.

Mr. BEACH. I have examined the bill and see no objection to its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read by its title a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE AT LAREDO, TEX.

Mr. HANCOCK. I now ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 664, to authorize the construction of a bridge for the transportation of street-cars and other vehicles, &c., over the Rio Grande River between the cities of Laredo, Tex., and Nueva Laredo, Mexico, and put it upon its passage. I will state that this bill is similar to the one which has already been passed, and if there be no objection I ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. WELLER. I would like to have the bill read.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the International Bridge and Tramway Company, a corporation organized and created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, own, maintain, and operate a street railway bridge over the Rio Grande River between the city of Laredo, Tex., and the city of Nueva Laredo, in the state of Tamaulipas, Mexico, at such a point as may be most convenient to said corporation, to unite and connect the street railroad to be constructed by them in the said city of Laredo with any street railroad that may be constructed by any person or company in the said city of Nueva Laredo; and to build and lay on and across said bridge ways for the passage of animals, foot-passengers, and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of which said corporation may charge a reasonable toll, which charge shall be subject to reasonable revision and regulation, from time to time, by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be built of good, substantial material, and of such strength and dimensions as may be sufficient to render the passage of all such vehicles, animals, and persons as are herein mentioned perfectly safe at any and all times.

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river; and in case of any litigation arising from an obstruction or an alleged obstruction to the free navigation thereof, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be tried before the circuit or district court of the United States of the State of Texas having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to withdraw the authority and power conferred by this act in case the free navigation of said river shall at any time be substantially or materially obstructed by said bridge, or for any other reason, and to direct the removal or necessary modifications thereof at the cost and expense of the owners of said bridge; and Congress may at any time alter, repeal, or amend this act. The right is reserved to the United States for the establishment of a postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 5. That the consent of the Mexican State of Tamaulipas and of the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read by its title a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4977) to authorize the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway to a point on the military lands at Fortress Monroe, Va., and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company is hereby authorized to extend its road from the present terminus thereof, on the waters of Mill Creek, county of Elizabeth City, Virginia, to a point on Hampton Roads, on the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon such terms and conditions as to location and otherwise as the Secretary of War may approve: Provided, That the privilege herein extended shall be construed as a limited easement only, having in view purposes beneficial to the military reservation at Fortress Monroe, and subject at all times to the order of the President of the United States: And provided further, That the said Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company shall construct and maintain thereon a suitable station, convenient and at all times accessible and open for the military transactions of said Fortress Monroe.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

Mr. COSGROVE. I would like to know something with reference to this bill before consent is given to any action upon it. What committee does it come from?

Mr. DIBRELL. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BEACH. I think we should have the report read, subject to objection.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I do not think that any one will insist upon the reading of the whole of this report if I may be permitted to make a brief statement in reference to it, as I can give the whole substance in a nutshell.

At present the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company, by the fact that the military reservation at Fortress Monroe extends to Mill Creek, is kept about a mile away from the fort, and it is a great inconvenience in many respects to the railroad company and the traveling public, as in fact everybody going there has to go to the fort. It is a great inconvenience to the Government itself, because in making its shipments to the fort it is required to haul them a mile, whereas this permission brings the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad to the very door of the fort, always, however, under the restrictions that the Government may remove the road or do away with it or require the terminus to be taken back to its present location.

The report is, I believe, unanimous from the committee to which the bill was referred. It simply grants a revocable permit to the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad to go down to the fort on the military reservation.

Mr. BEACH. I would inquire of the gentleman from Virginia whether the Secretary of War approves of that proposition?

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. The whole is subject to his approval. The bill allows the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company nothing except under such regulations and restrictions as the Secretary of War may dictate, and I am authorized to say the Secretary of War heartily approves of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSGROVE. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. PUSEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6762) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected between the north and the south line of the county of Douglas, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Nebraska Central Railway Company, an incorporation organized under the laws of the State of Nebraska, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River at such a point as may be hereafter selected by said corporation between the north and the south line of the county of Douglas, in the State of Nebraska, and at least one-third of a mile from any other bridge, as shall best promote the public convenience and welfare and the necessities of business and commerce; and also to construct accessory works to secure the best practicable channel-way for navigation, and confine the flow of the water to a permanent channel at such point, and also to lay on and over said bridge a railway track for the more perfect connection of any railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river at or opposite said point; and said corporation may construct and maintain ways for wagons, carriages, and for foot passengers, charging and receiving reasonable toll therefor as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed and built without material interference with the security and convenience of navigation of said river beyond what is necessary to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in order to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall have three or more channel spans, and shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than three hundred feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river, and not less than three hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot-draw bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans to the draw shall not be less than three hundred feet, and the head-room under such span shall not be less than ten feet above high-water mark: Provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passing of boats; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe: Provided also, That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving such plan and map and other information, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and with such accessory works and at such locality will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act, to notify the company that he approves the same; and upon receiving such notification the said company may proceed to an erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge or said accessory works, during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the State of Nebraska or State of Iowa in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located.

SEC. 4. That the said bridge and accessory works, when built and constructed under this act and according to the terms and limitations thereof, shall be lawful structures; and said bridge shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and said bridge shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-routes in the United States; and Congress reserves the right at any time to regulate by appropriate legislation the charges for freight and passengers over said bridge.

SEC. 5. That the United States shall have the right of way for such postal telegraph lines across said bridge as the Government may construct or control.

SEC. 6. That Congress shall have power at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge and its accessory works; and the expense of altering said bridge or removing such obstructions shall be at the expense of the owners of or persons controlling such bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the first section of this act provides for some person fixing, in the first instance, the cost of transportation over the bridge. I should like to hear that portion of the first section read again.

Mr. PUSEY. It is placed under the control of the Secretary of War.

The Clerk read the last two lines of section 1, as follows:

Charging and receiving reasonable toll therefor, as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all.

Mr. BEACH. That makes it all right.

Mr. PUSEY. I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendments which I send to the desk, one of which is merely verbal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PUSEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, section 1, strike out the word "may" and insert "shall."

After line 20 of section 1 insert the following:

"Provided, Said bridge and all property belonging to or connected with the bridge shall be constructed, maintained, and used as a combined railway and wagon bridge for the safe and convenient passage of wagons, carriages, stock, steam-cable and street cars, and all road travel, but the same travel shall not be upon the same space as used for railroad track and cars."

Mr. HOLMAN. Where does that proviso come in?

Mr. PUSEY. At the end of the first section.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PUSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. COSGROVE. I desire to withdraw my objection to the bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE].

Mr. WELLER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his objection to the bill indicated. And pending that the gentleman from Iowa calls for the regular order.

Mr. WELLER. I withdraw the call for the regular order pending the question on the bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the call for the regular order is waived I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia what amount of public property is appropriated here and whether the bill is recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of War and also by General Hancock. In reply to the other portion of the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana, I will say that only a sand-beach is appropriated, and that is for the benefit of the military authorities.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Secretary of War recommends the bill I will not object.

The bill (H. R. 4977) to authorize the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company to a point on the military lands at Fortress Monroe, Va., was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that Saturday, June 7, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads, unless they are considered prior to that time under the special order heretofore made by the House.

Mr. CASSIDY. There is one of those bills which it is very important should be considered.

Mr. RANDALL. I will not object if the gentleman from Kentucky excepts appropriation bills.

Mr. THOMPSON. They are already excepted under the special order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Bills from the Committee on Public Lands should be excepted also.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what is the bill of special importance which the Committee on Pacific Railroads desires to have considered?

Mr. THOMPSON. The amendment to the Thurman sinking-fund act.

Mr. BLOUNT. So I supposed.

Mr. CASSIDY. That is the most important bill. There are others.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand the proposition correctly, this assignment of a particular day is subject to all the restrictions that were fixed by the original proposition making the special order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will make the exception desired by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLMAN. I perceive that the special order does not except the reports from the Committee on Public Lands. It excepts only revenue and appropriation bills. I suppose the gentleman has no objection to excepting also reports from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. THOMPSON. If we have to give way to the Committee on Public Lands we shall have to give way to every prior order.

Mr. COBB. If the reports from the Committee on Public Lands are not excepted I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the Committee on Public Lands has leave to report at any time. This is a matter of great importance.

Mr. THOMPSON. The proposition is only for the assignment of one day. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will consent to give us one day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNES. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BURNES. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The motion of Mr. BURNES was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof), and the morning hour was dispensed with.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, for ten days from Saturday next.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Austria, Italy, Chili, who shall also be accredited to and perform the duties of chargé d'affaires to Bolivia without additional compensation for services; Peru, who shall also be accredited to and perform the duties of chargé d'affaires to Ecuador without additional compensation for services; and United States of Colombia, at $10,000 each, $50,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend the pending paragraph by inserting, after the word "Italy," in line 16, the words "twelve thousand dollars each;" also, in line 22, by striking out "$50,000," and inserting "$54,000."

The paragraph as it now stands proposes to reduce the salaries of our ministers at Rome and Vienna from $12,000 to $10,000 per annum. My amendment proposes to retain them as they are at present. I know of no reason why the compensation which has heretofore been allowed to our representatives at those two capitals should now be reduced. They were years ago fixed after much inquiry and long experience. The cost of living in those capitals has increased of recent years instead of diminishing. The rent of a house suitable for a respectable residence of a minister representing our country there amounts to a very considerable part of his salary.

The gentleman who long represented the United States at Rome with honor to our country and with great efficiency, and who not long since died—I refer to an illustrious scholar and statesman, known by his great reputation to all Americans, George P. Marsh—told me that his expenses there had risen so that it was only by economy and care on the part of himself and his family and of all connected with the legation that he could meet the necessary expenses from his salary.

It should be the policy of our country to deal justly with its citizens who are sent into service abroad, to provide fairly for their support, and not to expect them to draw upon their own private resources for their necessary expenses in the performance of a great public duty. Whether the present incumbent may be a man whose ample purse and generous disposition might lead him willingly or uncomplainingly to pay the expenses which his duty imposes upon him is not for us to consider.

We should pay our ministers abroad so justly and fairly that any American, whatever his resources, whose reputation and abilities justify the President in designating him to act as our minister and represent us at foreign courts, where great questions are constantly arising for adjustment, can do so in a fitting manner, whatever be his fortune or lot at home. We should not confine these offices to those who are willing to help out their salaries from their own private means.

The mission to Vienna is one that is of great importance, and, as many gentlemen on this floor know, our minister there has been recently called upon to deal not only with political questions between this country and that, but also great questions concerning our commerce and requiring his active intervention and constant solicitous care. He has so discharged his important duties as to conduce in a high degree to the promotion of our national interests, and his mode of life is fitting—dignified, without ostentation. The salaries of both offices should stand unchanged.

Mr. BURNES. It is for this House to determine whether the minister at Austria and the minister at Italy shall receive a greater salary than each one of the nine illustrious gentlemen who preside in the Supreme Court of the United States; whether they shall receive a greater salary than the chief of the State Department in the city of Washington, our present distinguished Secretary of State; whether they shall receive a greater salary than the Secretary of War, the son of our illustrious Lincoln; whether they shall receive a greater salary than our ministers to the neighboring South American republics that are bound up with us in destiny upon this continent; whether the salaries of our ministers in the South American and Central American States shall be $10,000 a year, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State, and whether the ministers we send to the effete and crumbling dynasties of Europe shall receive a greater salary, where we have no great commercial interests. That is a question for this House to decide.

I ask this House further to decide whether it is any more expensive living at Vienna than at Constantinople. Yet the honorable Secretary of State recommends a salary of $7,500 for the minister at Constantinople. I also ask this House to determine the question why it is we pay, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State, a salary of but $5,000 each to our ministers at Switzerland, Denmark, Portugal, Persia, Siam, and Corea. I ask, if $5,000 is sufficient to send a minister to Persia or Siam and $7,500 is sufficient for the minister at Constantinople, why is not $10,000 sufficient for our ministers to the courts of Vienna and Rome?

I submit the question (which it is for the House to determine) upon what principle, for what reason, will you lift the representatives of this Government in these two grades, so far as salaries are concerned, above all the representatives I have named and above all the officials of this Government to whom I have alluded. I now demand a vote.

Mr. KASSON. Before the vote is taken, I move pro forma to strike out the last word, in order to answer my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] who demands the reason for the action we propose. How can he demand a special reason in view of the inequalities to which he himself has referred in the bill? From the beginning there have been inequalities in the appropriations for our representatives at different capitals. The four northern capitals have one rate, the middle grade another, and the third grade another. And these grades were established on careful consideration in this House before the Republican administration came into existence; they were established independently of party, only the honor of the country and the national interests being consulted.

Now, sir, I will tell the gentleman distinctly why in the cases named a distinction is to be made between Persia on the one hand and London on the other which does not apply in the cases of Austria and Italy. The four northern capitals represent the greater of the great powers of Europe. Our political as well as commercial interests there are important; the expenses of living are very great—greater in those capitals than in the others. This whole subject has been gone over again and again in this House; and both sides have stood by the grades established on careful examination and consideration by our former committees. To change these grades upon the report of a committee that has not a particle of jurisdiction of the main question of our foreign affairs is to violate all the precedents of this House.

I am not here as representing the minority on this question. I represent that sentiment of this House and this country that demands a decent treatment of the representation of the United States abroad. I know that my judgment is confirmed by every man on the other side of the House who has studied this question and knows what national honor means, what national representation signifies. Our relations with the government at Vienna are more important than our relations to Siam or Persia or Turkey. The expenses of living are greater at Vienna than at these other points.

I wish I had time to show gentlemen how often we are surprised by the necessity of a representation of the United States at a foreign court that we have before thought unimportant. Hundreds of instances occurred during the late war when our representation at such points was of vast significance. During the recent service of our minister at Vienna the whole Central American question, which has nearly involved us in a war with Great Britain, came up at that court, and the intervention of the American minister was required for the protection of Central American interests. Why? Because the Emperor of Austria had been chosen as umpire in the settlement of the treaty questions that arose between Great Britain and Central America, and the American legation was appealed to because it represented a great power interested in the question, so that day after day the representatives of Central America came to that legation for consultation and advice.

It is dangerous, sir, to deal hastily with these questions without examination by your proper committee. I repeat to the other side of the House that they should require a report from a committee that keeps the run of the foreign affairs of this country before attempting either to abolish representation or to strike down the grade of representation at any of these foreign courts.

The expenses of living are higher at Rome than ever before, because Rome in late years has been made the capital of Italy; and our minister there must maintain in a becoming manner the character of the United States. There are five great powers in Europe. Our nation is known to be a great power——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has referred to Austria and I think has sufficiently explained why the minister to Austria should not be singled out for a reduction of salary. I desire to say a single word in regard to Italy.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]—so correct in language, so careful in statement—refer to Italy as a "crumbling and effete monarchy." My understanding is that Italy is anything else than a "crumbling and effete monarchy." My understanding is that the once feeble states of Italy have been consolidated into a government anything else than such as the gentleman from Missouri characterizes it. I understand that the fleet of Italy is one of the commanding fleets of the world. I understand that her commerce is greater than that of many other nations, and that her flag is to-day seen in the ports of the world second only to the flags of England and France.

Mr. KASSON. And an Italian line of steamers to the United States has just been established.

Mr. RICE. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we are seeking to build up our commerce with foreign nations, when we are seeking to protect the interests of those who are engaged in foreign traffic, why should we single out our minister to Italy and reduce him to a lower compensation than that which he has heretofore received, and for no reason in the world except that stated by the gentleman from Missouri, that Italy is a "crumbling and effete monarchy?"

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will prevail, and that these salaries will remain where they are until some better reason can be shown for their reduction. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment. I do so for the purpose of correcting what I deem to be a misstatement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON]. He has time and again stated here that the salaries of our foreign ministers and consuls were arranged before the war by men of different parties; and therefore he appeals to this side of the House to stand by that settlement.

Now, sir, there are some of us here who remember quite well when this House changed the salaries of ministers and consuls on an appropriation bill in this House at the instance of the then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. Orth, of Indiana. The inference therefore based on the erroneous statement of the gentleman from Iowa is not to be regarded.

Mr. KASSON. Does not the gentleman remember the law of 1856?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

Mr. KASSON. I have it here.

Mr. BLOUNT. My recollection is the whole consular and diplomatic service was changed by the act of the Forty-third Congress on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. KASSON. My friend is mistaken.

Mr. BLOUNT. And it was done on motion of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Georgia is mistaken, as he will find if he will look at the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not do it in five minutes.

Mr. KASSON. But you have charged me with having misinformed the House. I appeal to the statute.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman can refer to the statutes and make his own statement. The fact is, however, as I have stated it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in so far as these missions are concerned I would not care a groat if they were entirely abolished. The gentleman seems to regard them of great importance. Communication with these states is quite easy and there are no questions in dispute between the countries demanding special attention. We had our trouble in the Virginius matter and although at that time we had our minister at Spain the whole question in dispute was adjusted here at home on the part of the Secretary of State. I apprehend, therefore, Mr. Chairman, we will have no difficulty on that score.

I do believe that our consular service deserves more attention. I should feel loath to strike at that service, but so far as these missions are concerned I do not think they are of much importance to us. If we were at the time Mr. Franklin was minister at France, it would be a different condition of affairs. If we were connected with a part of the Continent and were concerned in questions which troubled them there, it would be a different matter; but I apprehend there is no danger so far as we are concerned. The maintenance of our commercial relations are most important and should be preserved. I trust the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations in this regard will be adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have before me, Mr. Chairman, the law for the fiscal year, June 30, 1882. If my memory serves me the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] who has just addressed the committee was a member of the subcommittee which prepared the consular and diplomatic bill for that year.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is mistaken in that fact.

Mr. HISCOCK. He was a member of the Committee on Appropriations. My recollection is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Clymer, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] were members of a subcommittee which prepared that consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. Possibly, however, I may be at fault.

I look at that law here and I discover for the current year the law is the same as it was fixed by the Democratic Appropriations Committee in the Forty-sixth Congress. That certainly was an economical committee. It was presided over by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS]. My friend from Georgia was a member of that committee, and my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] was a member of that committee, and they fixed these salaries at $12,000 a year.

Now I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to give this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union some information that has come to his knowledge since that time which renders the proposed reduction necessary and proper. It was fixed by the Democratic Congress at $12,000, and when we came into power on this side of the House we continued it at $12,000. We did not increase it; we did not increase any of these salaries. I ask therefore that the gentleman from Missouri will give us some reason and indicate to us the new light that has been shed on this question justifying the Committee on Appropriations in reducing these salaries below the point at which they were fixed, as I have shown, by a Democratic Congress. What change has there been since then? Can they live more cheaply over there? Have they less to do now than they had to do then? Have we less commercial relations there—are there any less pure reasons for maintaining diplomatic relations then than now?

I think every one will agree with me the Appropriations Committee for the Forty-seventh Congress was as economical as it was proper it should be for the good of the country. I would like to have some reason why this wholesale cut is made.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me in that connection, I wish to say this is not the bill as reported by the committee. The Democratic party tried to cut down all these salaries, but they were put back by the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have the law for that year before me. I do not recollect, of course, how it was reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. But you make the assumption.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have the law here of 1882.

Mr. CANNON. The law of 1879 fixed all these salaries.

Mr. HISCOCK. Which clause do you refer to?

Mr. CANNON. That relating to salaries; the last clause of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; this was in 1879. It is as follows:

> And the salaries provided in this act for the officers within named, respectively, shall be in full for the annual salaries thereof from and after the 1st of July, 1879, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Now, it has been the settled policy of Congress to give these amounts, and I do certainly hope and I have the right to appeal to the gentleman from Missouri that he will shed upon the committee the benefits of such new lights as he may have or which have illuminated his mind upon this question, and which in his judgment would justify the House in making this reduction.

Mr. REED. I suppose it is because, as he says, Austria is an "effete" despotism. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK And I would ask the gentleman if there has been any change in Austria in the last two years.

Mr. REED. It has become effeter, I presume. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I renew it.

I rise for the purpose of saying that I am opposed to the reduction of the salaries of officers in the diplomatic service of this Government. I see no reason why they should be treated differently from other officers of the Government; and unless it is to be a part of our policy to reduce all governmental salaries I think no reduction should be made in these salaries which are the most moderate of any.

I am particularly opposed to the discrimination which it is proposed to make between our representatives at Vienna and Rome and those who represent us in China, Spain, and Mexico. The city of Rome is an expensive city in which to live, quite as much so as the city of Washington. Besides, it is well known that owing to the climatic conditions of Rome it is quite dangerous for foreigners to reside in that city during the months of July, August, September, and October. It has always been customary for our own minister, as well as the other ministers resident in Rome, to remove elsewhere during the months I have named. Therefore we have to consider that the gentleman who represents us must reside in two places in Italy, and is put to the additional expense that a summer residence necessarily involves. At present the gentleman who represents this country in Rome is the wealthiest young man in the United States.

To Mr. William W. Astor, with an income of several millions a year, it is a matter of very slight consequence whether this Government pays him $12,000 or pays him nothing. But I am one of those who do not believe in putting property qualifications upon these places, nor do I think it democratic to do so. It has long been well understood by our Government, and may as well be stated here, that certain official places are to be held by rich men alone; such places as Cabinet ministers are meant to be held by rich men alone; and it has long been well understood that as to two or three places, at least, in the Cabinet no person would be appointed to them unless he was a rich man. It is also well understood that to certain of our foreign missions no one can be sent unless he has an income which will enable him to make larger expenditures than the salary would justify. I submit that this is entirely undemocratic, and that the Democratic side of this House should go no further in the policy to which our opponents have adhered of making the high places of this Government tenable by the rich alone. It is not in consonance with the sentiment of the people nor the theory of our Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it is a very difficult matter to answer the general statements of the social necessities of a minister at any of these foreign courts. It is also exceedingly unpleasant to refer to the private affairs of a minister at a foreign court or elsewhere. I remember quite well, however, before the war—I shall not give any names—that a minister from this Government to Austria sent home to his law partner, and from whom I will state that I have the information, quite a considerable sum of money annually as the savings from his salary. I understand the same thing has occurred with a minister from this country since the war. I have no doubt of the truth of these statements; and yet without Congress knowing anything of the details we are constantly treated with the idea that there are large expenditures necessarily involved in the occupancy of these positions and that the salary is totally inadequate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Can you state the amounts which were sent, and to which you refer?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not give the exact amount.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will you state whether the amount was large or small?

Mr. BLOUNT. It was a large amount.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Were these gentlemen occupying that position living in places where they could be found?

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume so.

Mr. O'NIELL, of Pennsylvania. What I wish to know is, whether American citizens who sought to find our American ministers under such circumstances as the gentleman from Georgia has referred to could find them; because if his statement be correct they must have lived in some very remote corner of the city to which they were accredited, if they lived there at all.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon occupying my time. If he wishes to ask a question I will answer it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Then I simply ask the gentleman the question, were they found by any American citizen?

Mr. BLOUNT. If there has ever been any complaint or quarrel with them upon that ground it has never reached my ears.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield. The gentleman is very shrewd about taking my time.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I can be recognized I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. What I want to say is that it is a notorious fact that in many of the capitals of Europe to which our ministers are accredited American citizens who desire to see them can scarcely find where they live, so remotely do they reside from the centers of business in those capitals because of the smallness of their salaries. And I will say, so far as consuls are concerned——

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not yield further.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Just a moment. So far as consuls are concerned, it is often impossible to find where these consuls are, so small is the compensation paid to them.

Mr. BLOUNT. I believe my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] promised to secure me more time.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Chair will recognize me I will yield the gentleman my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] tells us our ministers at various places could not be found. I have heard that statement very often.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. There is no trouble in finding where their offices are.

Mr. BLOUNT. I imagine there is very much of exaggeration about this whole matter. I can conceive of no reason why a minister to Great Britain is necessarily compelled to expend the sum of $50,000 or $100,000 a year in a social way, as I have heard stated on this floor. If the object of this salary is to enable the minister to entertain every one who sees fit to go abroad—if that is the purpose of it—I submit that that furnishes a very poor reason for increasing the salary.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] says that the salaries are small, that a man of large wealth is at Italy, that he can afford to take the mission there, but a man of smaller means is excluded by reason of the expenditure that is required. We have no information as to what the expenditures are in Italy except so far as it is furnished by this general exaggerated way of presenting it to the House, without any detail upon which to form any intelligent estimate.

Now, sir, I believe that in all probability some gentleman other than a millionaire from New York city, some gentleman with some knowledge of public affairs, some gentleman with some knowledge of our international relations, would have been selected for that important court were it not true that our relations there and the questions there considered are not of a delicate character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. When I was interrupted by the expiration of my five minutes I was about to say that if it is regarded as desirable to make important economies in our diplomatic service, I think there is another and better way in which those economies may be made, and that is by a consolidation of the missions and by doing away with a number of them.

I do not see why the minister to Spain may not as well be accredited to the court of Portugal; nor can I see why the mission to the Netherlands and the mission to Belgium should not be consolidated; nor why the mission to Denmark and the mission to Sweden and Norway should not be consolidated. If it is thought that our diplomatic service is beyond the resources of the country and too expensive, we might make important economies by a consolidation of the various missions.

But in my judgment the economies proposed are unworthy of the country and the sum total of them is too insignificant, in view of the late action of this House, to be considered at all. One week the House of Representatives, in which the Democracy have a majority of something like sixty, rejected a bill by which it was proposed to reduce taxation by $35,000,000, and the next week it makes a petty economy of three hundred and odd thousand dollars by taking away a part of the salaries of secretaries of legation and of consuls who are paid less than $3,000 a year. In my judgment this service should either be properly supported or it should be done away with altogether. And this bill does not propose a proper support, but, I repeat, proposes an economy entirely unworthy of this House and unworthy of a party which seeks to obtain the control of the Government.

As to whether a man can live on the salary, beyond any doubt there is no salary in the bill upon which a man can not live. A man can go to Rome and live on $2,500 or $1,000 a year. But is it desired that we shall send a minister to Rome to live on $2,500 a year? It would be better, would it not, that we should send none at all, and do our business with that court by telegram, if indeed it would be within the resources of this country to pay for telegraphic dispatches. This bill further makes a discrimination entirely improper to make against the Kingdom of Italy, because the only object of these differences in salary is to make a discrimination in rank. The reason why the minister to London is paid $17,500 and the minister to Rome is paid but $10,000 is because under our system the one mission ranks higher than the other one does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I should like a minute or two more to complete my observations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] should have left the assaults on this bill to the other side of the House. It would have come more naturally from that side than from this, with its more than sixty majority and its responsibility for the legislative action of the House. Arguments against the habitual policy of the Democratic party to reduce the salaries of this effete and worthless system of so-called diplomacy which former ages have bequeathed to us come quite naturally from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON]. To him the system is still valuable; and for years he has here expressed his sense of its value, and seems to adhere to the view that the standing of the representatives of this Government at the courts of Europe depends on the amplitude of their expenditure, and that it comports with the honor and character of our Republic that its representatives abroad should put on the airs and style common to the courts of Europe; but such sentiments are not and have not been common to this side of the House.

In regard to these salaries, which my friend from New York thinks proper to designate as petty—salaries which are ample, as I believe, even beyond the approval of our people—he misapprehends in his estimate of these salaries the temper of that side of the House, and I think misrepresents the temper and views of the great body of that party of which he is an honored member. When the party of the other side of the House a few years ago, with ample power, increased the salary of the Secretary of State, the recognized head of your whole diplomatic system, to $10,000 a year, the people, with a voice which no member on either side of the House then misunderstood, demanded its repeal, and Congress promptly reduced his salary to $8,000 a year, which for years has been deemed sufficient. The public rebuke was prompt and decisive.

Yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER], joining with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], thinks that a salary fixed by the mandate of the people of this country so recently as ten years ago, of $8,000 a year, is a petty salary to be given to the head of one of the departments of your Government, and a salary of $10,000 a year, as fixed by this bill, still more petty when given to a minister, a subordinate of the Secretary of State, representing this Government at a second or third rate foreign court, a minister with nothing to do but to play the courtier in idle display, with no responsibility resting upon him, absolutely a gentleman of elegant leisure, representing an effete system that comes down to us from former generations when diplomacy had a meaning, a system well enough when nations were separated and isolated, valuable to crowned heads in giving importance to courts, but now, with the nations brought together by the new agents of intercourse, absolutely valueless except for display. A republic at least can not afford to tax its people to perpetuate this bauble of the days when the display of courts ruled the world.

I trust that at least from this side of the House seldom if at all shall the pretense be set up that the salaries paid by this Government should harmonize with the salaries paid by monarchies, where in the nature of things a brilliant manifestation of authority, ignoring the class that bears the burden, is deemed necessary to the stability of government. A salary of $10,000 a year for such services is not a petty salary. Indeed it would be a high salary at any price.

No, sir; this whole system of foreign ministers, these expensive sinecures, ought to be entirely abolished. Your consular system should be extended everywhere; your commerce should be the subject of solicitude and protection in every port of the globe. But this diplomatic display, this thing of by-gone ages, this thing of trappings and display of courts and of kingly authority ought to be abolished. A republic recognized throughout the world for its power and justice can not afford to keep up the petty system of display. It does not comport with the character of this Republic, and I trust never will. No, sir, this system of diplomacy in which the representatives of a republic are expected to imitate the example of countries of the monarchies of the world can not be abolished too soon. We have no such political relations with other nations as even form an excuse for perpetuating such a system. The agents of commerce, not of political authority, are the agents who should represent us in the industries, not the courts of the world.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out the last word but one.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. REED. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I thank the gentleman from Maine. It is not easy to reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and preserve the appearance of respect for him which his long service in this House and his long and valuable service to the country would seem to require.

I was not elected to sit upon the other side of the House; I was elected to sit and act upon this side of the House. But I was elected to represent a Democratic constituency according to my judgment, and that duty I am now performing.

The appeal of the gentleman from Indiana to party fealty would have been far more impressive if it had been made when a bill was pending in this House proposing to reduce taxation $30,000,000, and not now when it is proposed to reduce salaries two and sixpence. [Laughter.] I was not saying that there ought to be any distinction between our ministers abroad growing out of their salaries; I was simply stating a fact. For one, I should be in favor of placing our ministers abroad upon an equality as to salaries; and where it is not considered worth while for us to send a minister of the first rank I would send none at all.

I was stating what the fact is, and that is that a distinction is made and has long been made by our customs between the missions at London and Paris and Berlin and St. Petersburg and other missions, and that distinction is denoted by the salary paid to those we appoint to fill the missions.

With some knowledge of those cities, I say here that a man can live as well in London as he can in Rome upon the same money, and there is no reason in the difference of expense between those cities for any difference of salaries. The scale of expenditure upon the continent of Europe since our civil war has risen as greatly as here, and now there is no cheap capital in Europe. The cities there are all of them expensive places to live in.

But I was not dealing with this subject upon any ground of what particular salaries are proper. I think we should not put down the salaries of our diplomatic representatives unless it is the avowed policy of the Democratic party to go through the entire list of public employés and make a reduction of all the salaries of all the persons in the civil service.

I repeat that the proposed economy is an unworthy one. The gentleman from Indiana talks about our ministers aping the manners of royalty. If he will go to any European city I will undertake to say that he will find the minister from this country living there with a simplicity as democratic as anybody can desire. Mr. Lowell lives in a three-story house upon a side square in the city of London which would rank in the grade of fourth-class houses in that city, and which would rank here in Washington with the grade of fourth-class houses in this city.

I never had but one occasion to visit our minister in Paris, and that was a number of years ago. I remember well the fatigue I endured in climbing up the three long flights of stairs which led to the magnificent "flat" in which he lived, our country not affording him a house.

Nowhere do American ministers make any display whatever, unless it happens that a gentleman like Mr. Astor, who can spend half a million dollars a year as easily as he can spend $1,000, may make some display. But from considerable experience in most of the European cities, I repeat that our foreign representatives live with a simplicity as democratic as that with which the gentleman from Indiana lives in this city.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt it would be entertaining to this House to listen still further to the reminiscences of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] with regard to his experience in foreign travel and association. But in view of the fact that a practical question has been suggested by the ever intelligent and distinguished Representative from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], I desire to say that there is no special reason for the reduction of these salaries now that did not exist in the former Congress.

I simply say that in this matter there are two contending forces—one is pulling up certain missions and the other pulling them down so as to reach something like an equality. As we give our South American ministers $10,000, so we want to equalize and harmonize these positions as far as possible. If these other missions can not be reduced to $10,000 we have at least reduced these two to that amount and are tending toward equalization and uniformity in the service.

I beg pardon for saying so much. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate upon this portion of the bill.

Mr. KASSON. My friend will allow me to suggest that perhaps time would be economized by allowing one or two gentlemen to speak——

Mr. BURNES. We will arrange that matter.

Mr. KASSON. I observed that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. CURTIN] rose a moment ago when I did, and I was about to give way to him.

Mr. BURNES. I will arrange that by conference with gentlemen who wish to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that the committee now rise in order that the House may limit debate upon the pending paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. Perhaps we might save time by unanimously agreeing to some limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair waited to see whether such a proposition would be made, but heard none.

Mr. BURNES. I ask that fifteen minutes on each side be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri suggests that by unanimous consent fifteen minutes be allowed for debate on each side. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that arrangement will be made. The gentleman from Missouri will control the time on one side, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the time on the other.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, my objection to the reduction of salaries included in this paragraph arises from my unwillingness to increase the number of offices that must be filled by wealthy men. I think it the most surprising thing in the world that the same gentlemen who day after day edify this House with their expressions of overflowing affection for the poor man should be those who are continually so ordering or attempting to order legislation as to prevent men of this country who are not wealthy from enjoying their fair chances to hold the official positions of the country.

Why, sir, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] himself, in the reasons which he undertakes to give for this reduction, only shows the tendency of our institutions as they are marked by our laws from day to day. He says, "Why should we pay our foreign ministers more than we pay our Secretary of State?" Why, sir, every member of this House knows that nobody but a rich man can accept the office of Secretary of State. Everybody knows that men of talent who are not wealthy are shut out from that office from the very nature of its expenditures. Instead of increasing the number of such offices we ought to diminish them; and the very reason which the gentleman from Missouri gives on his side is a reason against him.

I know that the Democratic party which is engineering this reduction is doing it for the short-sighted reason that its members know they will not fill those offices the next time. But I submit that you ought to act with a larger wisdom and with more foresightedness. Everything comes to an end; and it may be that in the future ages, possibly before some of you die, you may have an opportunity to fill these positions from the ranks of your own party. Do you want to hand them over to the rich men of your ranks, or do you want to give every member of your party a fair chance? I know this is a far-away hope for you. I know that it may be a long time before it can be realized. But "republics are ungrateful." Even Aristides the Just was banished by a long-ago famous republic; and a similar fate may happen to the good men who are now in possession of this Government. But you ought to act with reference to the advantage of the country. You know, every one of you, that the expenditures abroad are such that the salaries ought to be increased instead of being diminished.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, during the Forty-fourth, the Forty-fifth, and the Forty-sixth Congresses the Democratic party was in control of this House; and during that period there constantly arose on the other side of the House many gentlemen performing the office which the gentleman from Maine is fulfilling to-day—denouncing the Democratic party for its "picayune economy"—advising it to a more liberal course, telling us how unwise our policy was, how much the people would disapprove what those gentlemen were pleased to designate the "meanness" of that policy. Yet during six of the last eight years the Democratic party maintained control of this House. The last Congress was the first exception since the Forty-fourth Congress came into power and a different policy was adopted, and the consequence was that those gentlemen on the other side did not dominate this House for two years.

Now, sir, I have been accustomed to it, and I have never felt that I am making a mistake when those gentlemen give me those lectures, because their error has been met by the judgment of the country against them almost during the entire period.

But I regret very much that my friend from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] should invite us, because, forsooth, on the tariff bill there was not an agreement on this side of the House, to further discord. I regret very much that that record which the Democratic party has had whenever it has been in control of the House since the war, upon which it has united without trouble, upon which it has met the approval of the country, and in which has been considered much of its merit—I regret that the gentleman from New York, because unfortunately we have been defeated on the tariff question, wants discord to arise on every other which comes before this House. We have a record to preserve, sir, and I trust we will not begin first on the naval appropriation bill, and then on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill by attempting to degrade a Democratic committee of this House and so strike blows at the party on every bill which that committee shall report. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, sir, I care not upon what else we may be defeated, this is a question upon which we can unite and this is a question upon which we can meet with the just approval of the House and country. Because exceptionally, as has always been the case, some gentlemen on this side of the House have united with those on the other side of the House to lecture us, I do not propose to turn to the right or to the left from the straight course which the party has always held in the matter of economy in the expenditures of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] has told us of Lowell in poor apartments in London. Did that gentleman undertake to tell us what those apartments cost? The gentleman says he does not know, and yet he proposes to enlighten us on the expenditures of our minister to Great Britain.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He is saving money, no doubt, out of his salary.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know anything about his private affairs. He may be saving, and certainly must be saving, if he is living in this style, just as I am informed the Austrian minister has done on several occasions.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has claimed these salaries were fixed by the Democratic party. I wish to say for several sessions the Democratic party came into the House with bills reducing these salaries and passed them through the House, but they were lost in conference with a Republican Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the gentleman will find these salaries were fixed when the Democratic party had the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I am not.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I promised to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] for five minutes, but he is not present just now and I will occupy a minute or two until he comes into the Hall.

The gentleman from Georgia said that the Democratic Congress did not fix these salaries. I hold in my hand the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, to be found on page 400 of the supplement to the Revised Statutes. That act was passed in 1879, and does fix these salaries.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me.

Mr. CANNON. I have not much time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I agree that a few Democratic Senators joined with Republican Senators to continue the salaries as they were.

Mr. CANNON. I say that with a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate there was an agreement by which this whole line of salaries was fixed, and I say further the provision fixing them is to be found in the last section of the bill as it came from the House, before the Senate ever saw it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What year was that?

Mr. CANNON. Eighteen hundred and seventy-nine. I will read that last section to which I refer. It is as follows:

And the salaries provided in this act for the officers within named, respectively, shall be in full for annual salaries thereof from and after the 1st day of July, 1879; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Now, the times were hard when this act was passed in 1879. It was a continuation of these salaries as they were fixed by the Democratic Congress in 1876, when my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was Speaker and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ATKINS, was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman from Georgia was a member of that committee. If, then, this is mere sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, if it be a make-believe, a mere pretense in order that gentlemen may posture before the country, then let the country understand it.

I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. I will not trouble the committee for any great length of time.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a question whether we will be represented abroad, and in a manner becoming the dignity of this Government, or whether we shall abandon our present system of diplomatic relations between this country and foreign nations. There is not a minister living abroad representing this country who can possibly save one cent of his present salary. That I think can be demonstrated. It is not a question of what kind of a house a man lives in, or what kind of a carriage he drives; it is a question of brains, and whether he is or is not fit to represent this country. If it be the pleasure of the executive power of this Government to appoint a man unfit for a mission, it is under our theory of government. If he appoints a rich man to a mission it counts nothing in the settlement of the question whether we shall be represented in that court or not. That is not the question.

The question of representation, then, is the only question to be considered. Nor, Mr. Chairman, is this a question of what occured last week in this House in reference to the reduction of the revenues of this country; and with all due respect to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER], as it pleased me in representing my constituency to differ with him on that question, I do not propose to be lectured on that subject at this time by him or by any other man. I will answer to my constituency and to my State for my course on that question and on any other question that arises in connection with my duties here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the rank of a mission abroad for some reason is fixed by the amount of the salary, and there are the four great missions of London, Paris, Berlin, and St. Petersburg fixed at $17,500. It was my good fortune to be in St. Petersburg when the salary of that mission was raised by the united voice of the Representatives on this floor from Pennsylvania. The salary at that mission is quite enough to support the minister in comfort and to give him all of the position that can be desired, and all of the influence. And permit me here to say that no American minister need be afraid of being treated with anything but respect from any quarter when he goes into the presence of imperialism or royalism if he always remembers the dignity of his place and that 56,000,000 of people stand behind him. [Applause.]

Now, there is not one-half as much to do in connection with the mission at St. Petersburg as there is in Vienna. Our relations with Russia, although she has a population of 100,000,000 of people, do not compare in a commercial point of view with our relations at Vienna, and we are near enough to that country to be sometimes involved in delicate diplomatic relations. I therefore know of no reason why the salary at Vienna should be cut down and that at St. Petersburg remain at the present rate of $17,500.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal about the elaborate display at foreign courts and the lavish expenditure of money on the part of our ministers in the presence of royalty. Well, there may be too much of that. I doubt not that there is. It may be possible, for perhaps it is human nature, that when an American citizen is taken suddenly from the ranks of the body of the people and elevated to the dignity of a foreign mission and comes for the first time into relations with royalty or imperialism that it does somewhat tend to change him and is apt to give him the "big head." [Laughter.] And I honestly confess that sometimes my hat felt really too small while I lived in St. Petersburg. [Great laughter.] But, sir, shall we break up our diplomatic relations with foreign countries entirely, or shall we put our ministers to foreign countries on competent salaries upon which they can live? That is the question.

We need not speak of the effete governments of Europe, or of royalty and imperialism. We need not criticise their customs and habits. Our relations with them are of a commercial character largely, and we must take them as they are. If they choose to be wise and put themselves on a par with us in the march of human progress, that is their lookout. We have preceded them in the march of liberalism and progress. We have traced out for them the paths of liberty and equality. We have aided them in liberalizing their governments, and yet we have not been the propagandists of our political sentiments, and they do not follow our example.

But we hear complaints that we have not commerce. That presents another question. Do you know, sir, that wherever there is a port in any quarter of the earth where the British merchant reaches with his ship, where the British mariner goes beneath the flag of Great Britain, no matter how insignificant that commerce may be, there is a hospital for the protection and care of their seamen? Salaries are paid attendants and there is a court organized for the protection of the commerce of Great Britain. During the period when I resided at St. Petersburg the cholera prevailed at Cronstadt, and American sailors were smitten with the disease. I made application then to allow them to be admitted into the British hospital, which was declined, and I appealed to the British minister in Cronstadt, and that kind old gentleman, since dead, went with me to Cronstadt, and the American sailors who were sick with the cholera were taken into and cared for at the British hospital at that place, and not one of them died from that disease.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to encourage commerce and trade let us begin where we should; let us protect our merchants and our marine, and wherever in the world we have commerce let there be a consul to protect our commerce, our sailors and our merchants. And if we are to be of consequence in the world, if we are to have any communication with the great powers, I do most sincerely object to a reduction of expenses as suggested by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER]. I would not accredit one man to a number of independent governments. Confusion would occur in your diplomacy. He would be subjected to jealousies on the part of the powers to which he was accredited. No, sir; if we are to keep up our diplomatic relations with foreign countries, let us send our ministers to every country which has relations in trade and in commerce with us who shall represent the dignity and power and force of this people. And let us pay them a fair compensation for their services. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWSHEND. The duty of the diplomatic corps is purely of a political character. The minister to Italy and the minister to Austria are simply the political agents of the Government. If there be necessity for political representatives of the Government in Austria and Italy, then there is a necessity for the appointment of a minister there, and his salary should be adequate for the purpose of representing the honor and the dignity of the Government.

But I am one of those who believe that there is no need of any political representative of the Government abroad anywhere. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] and others who have spoken in behalf of the consular service. I believe in upbuilding the commerce of this country. I would rather, sir, to-day boast that the American flag was recognized as the controller of the commerce of the world than that it was the controller of the territory of the world. It is only by building up the consular service that we can extend our trade into foreign countries and open new markets to our products.

There is no need whatever for diplomatic service nor for any political agents abroad. I should therefore cheerfully vote for abolishing the entire diplomatic corps. But, Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to the fact that you can not put your finger upon a single national Democratic platform that has not declared in unequivocal terms in favor of economy. It has become one of the cardinal principles of the party. It is found in its first, in its second, in all its platforms. And what are we asking for to-day? We are asking that extravagant appropriations that have been made by the Republican party shall be curtailed and that our service shall be put upon an economical basis.

I am no advocate for cheese-paring economy. I am in favor of substantial economy. I am in favor of paying the foreign ministers, as well as all other servants of the Government, all that may be needed for the purpose of making the service efficient and giving a proper and just compensation. And I would ask my friend from New York [Mr.

HISCOCK], as he has put several questions to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], inquiring why we have reduced the compensation of this minister to Austria—I would like that gentleman to take the floor here to-day and show the necessity in any degree whatever for a political or diplomatic representative in Austria.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman define what he means by "political" in the sense in which he uses the term?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I mean that the minister has nothing whatever to do with the commercial relations of this Government with Austria; that his duties are confined to the political relations of this Government with Austria.

Mr. KASSON. He has a great deal to do with the commercial relations. I know it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from Illinois tell the committee, so far as our treaties are concerned, that commerce does not hinge upon them?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will not take up more of my time. I catch his idea. Whenever it becomes necessary——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I should like to have had a little more time.

Mr. BURNES. I yield the remaining five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT].

Mr. HUNT. In the absence of further facts than have been given us so far in this debate, my impression is that the present rates of salary were fixed by a Democratic Congress. However, be that as it may, I think the real question before the committee is whether the salaries fixed by the bill are rightly fixed. If they are not rightly fixed, we should change them.

Mr. KASSON. I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana that I have here the statute of 1856, which fixes the salary of the minister to Austria at $12,000. It was fixed at that figure twenty-eight years ago.

Mr. RANDALL. Not Italy. The minister to Italy had $10,000 in that act.

Mr. KASSON. There was no Italy then.

Mr. RANDALL. There was a Rome nevertheless.

Mr. KASSON. But not an Italy.

Mr. HUNT. We are not without evidence as to the inadequacy of the stipends paid to our ministers abroad. I think all of us recollect that Mr. Buchanan when in London wrote that the pay there was inadequate; that when a very distinguished gentleman, justly the pride of his country, Mr. Dallas, was in Great Britain the salary was found by him also to be insufficient. I recollect, too, very well that one of the causes of inconvenience to Mr. Livingston was because his salary was too limited—I refer to Edward Livingston, who served in France in the time of General Jackson with signal distinction, when the relations of the United States with that country were in a very troubled condition.

Nor do I agree with the gentleman from Illinois who sits before me [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the diplomatic corps ought to be abolished. The conventional law of nations is the most important part practically, and the most diffusive part of the law of nations; and it springs into existence, to a considerable extent at least, owing to the relations which diplomatic ministers and agents abroad naturally have with the countries to which they are accredited. Besides, there are other uses and offices than making treaties for those who represent us abroad. I for one will always recollect, for I heard it with great pleasure and pride as an American, that only the other day our minister at Rome was instrumental in securing the exemption from confiscation of church property erected by the alms and religious offerings of a great body of Christians in the United States. I think, Mr. Chairman, that generally speaking I would be more inclined to be liberal in these matters than my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. While I consider that economy is a virtue, I also believe that parsimony is a vice, both in individual and national character.

The discussion has, however, wandered somewhat, and it was rather because of that wandering that I rose to say a word. I have never been abroad, and I am inclined to trust the committees of the House. In matters which they have particularly investigated and which I have not examined I am willing, as a general rule, to follow them. In this particular instance, at any rate, the diminution of salary proposed is only $2,000, and that after all does not seem to be a very great matter on which to detain Congress.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] has seized the occasion to read the Democratic party a lecture upon the subject of the vote lately given in the House on the tariff, and the gentleman delivered himself in no unmistakable tones on this subject. The gentleman spoke to-day; but New Jersey was heard only a few days ago, and Virginia spoke yesterday. Their voice is different from that of the gentleman from New York. Since the gentleman has alluded to the tariff, I will say that the votes recently given upon that subject have gone to the country, and no man feels less reluctance than I do to refer to his vote and to the legitimate and very moderate protection that it has been instrumental in securing to the deserving industries of the State of Louisiana. We expect, Mr. Chairman, not to hear any more that we are in favor of a high rate of taxation, because it is not true. We are against taxation which is unfriendly to the American people and which would impoverish the American laborer, and we are against that which is directly oppressive upon the citizen. Speaking for those Democrats who voted with me, we will go as far as the gentleman from New York in reducing taxes, and consider we have no occasion to receive from him any lessons upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The time limited for debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto has been exhausted. The question now is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT.]

The amendment was, to restore the salaries of the ministers to Austria and Italy to $12,000 each.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 59, noes 64.

Mr. HITT. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HITT and Mr. BURNES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 70, noes 73.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For salaries of ministers resident and consuls-general in Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Hawaiian Islands, at $7,500 each, $30,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 34, the following:
"For minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, $6,500."

Mr. HITT. The mission now filled by the representative of this country accredited to the three nations named in my proposition has been a recent creation, corresponding with the recent creation of the two Governments of Roumania and Servia. We long had a minister to Greece, but it was deemed wise by Congress some years ago to suspend that office. The minister was then paid a higher salary than is now paid to the representative accredited to all three of these powers.

That representative now is not only our diplomatic representative as a minister there, but he is also the consul-general of the United States. The present representative is one who by his experience in the consular service and by his subsequent experience in the diplomatic service it was thought would be an active and efficient agent in forwarding our commercial interests and in managing our diplomatic affairs in those countries. He is further peculiarly fitted for the position from the fact that he speaks the Slavic language.

His duties have undoubtedly been chiefly diplomatic, in that he was establishing diplomatic relations between those countries and this, rather than in promoting relations of commercial intercourse and international communication already established. There is a considerable amount of commerce now existing with each of these countries, not so much of importation from them as of exportation of our products from this country to those regions.

There are reasons which relate to our trade alone that would justify us in continuing a minister to those countries. Besides, we have long been on terms of friendship and of active sympathy with the Greek Government and the Greek people. Our intercourse is greatly facilitated and is made much more welcome on the part of any court in Europe if it is carried on through a diplomatic rather than a consular officer for international communication. We are exporting largely to Servia. We sent there last year a half a million dollars' worth of one article.

It is proposed by this bill to cut off this mission, to do away with our diplomatic representative to three several countries, and to substitute therefor a consul in one place at $2,000 a year and another consul in another place at $3,000 a year. It will be observed that in that way the saving proposed is only $1,500. The persons who will fill those two posts can not possibly be as efficient in representing our interests in any question that may arise as would a diplomatic representative from this country. We can not tell at what moment a complication of grave importance in the Eastern Mediterranean countries may require the active intervention and agency of a diplomatic representative from this country.

The saving is so small, especially when we take into view the diminished efficiency of the service, that I think we should pause before making such a change. The bill would in fact greatly impair the efficiency of our representation in those countries, would cut off utterly all representation to one of them—Servia, a country with which we have an active and promising commerce. I do not know whether the House is disposed to alter in any degree the provisions of the bill——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. I have simply to say to the committee that if we wish to negotiate with Greece we should negotiate in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. Those three governments are in absolute control of the government of Greece. They established it; they prop and sustain it, each of them contributing £4,000 for the support of this petty power.

One word more. The anomaly is now presented of a minister serving at three courts—in Greece, in Roumania, and in Servia. The statement of this proposition is, I trust, sufficient. But blended with the ministerial duties is the consular function at these three places; and I ask you is it appropriate, is it in accordance with anything that we have ever read or heard from the State Department or from anywhere else with regard to our foreign service, that a man should undertake to represent us at three courts, at the same time performing consular functions at three cities? We propose to abolish the ministerial service because our ministers in the three great countries I have named can, if we should desire any negotiation in regard to the government of Greece, negotiate with the parties of the first part.

So far as the consular service is concerned, it is provided for. And I say to my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that he had better beware of coal-oil. Our party has had some apprehension that this article might be of damage to the party; and, sir, it may be damaging to his party if the country knows that he would maintain a minister in Greece to represent fifty thousand dollars' worth of coal-oil.

We propose to put consuls there to represent these commercial interests. This bill places a consul at Athens and a consul in Roumania. Having said this I need say no more, except to refer you to a gentleman who will give you more information than I can.

Before passing from this subject, however, let me say that the debt of Greece is $142,000,000, upon which the annual interest is $4,400,000. The area of the country is 25,000 square miles, 41 per cent. of which is productive and 59 per cent. non-productive. The population is less than 2,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this arrangement of placing these commercial representatives of this country to look after whatever trade we may have there has been made with the approval of the distinguished diplomate and statesman who on this floor represents in part the State of Pennsylvania. I allude to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. CURTIN]. I trust he will give us the benefit of his views.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. It has been said here to-day, especially by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], that our diplomates abroad are purely political; that these positions at foreign courts have been established with reference altogether to our political relations; that, on the other hand, our consular service is purely commercial, and that it is for the interest of the people that we should be liberal in making appropriations for the consular service. In this last position I agree. But if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Missouri for a moment, I desire to read a provision of the Revised Statutes in reference to the duties of our diplomatic and consular representatives:

SEC. 1752. The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations, and make and issue such orders and instructions, not inconsistent with the Constitution or any law of the United States, in relation to the duties of all diplomatic and consular officers, the transaction of their business, the rendering of accounts and returns, the payment of compensation, the safe-keeping of the archives and public property in the hands of all such officers, the communication of information, and the procurement and transmission of the products of the arts, sciences, manufactures, agriculture, and commerce, from time to time, as he may think conducive to the public interests. It shall be the duty of all such officers to conform to such regulations, orders, and instructions.

It thus appears that our diplomatic representatives are as fully the commercial agents of this Government abroad as are our consular officers. There is only, perhaps, this distinction, that our diplomatic representatives deal more largely and directly with the governments, while the consular agents located at particular points deal especially with citizens or with the representatives of the Government at those points.

Thus, sir, when you propose to strike down the diplomatic service you aim a blow at the commerce of the United States in foreign countries as directly as if you should strike at the consular service. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], or the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. BURNES], or my esteemed friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], who has had experience in these matters, tell me where the difference lies. There is none.

One more point I desire to make. I understand my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to insist that the salaries of our diplomates abroad should be reduced for the reason that somebody has been able to save money from his salary. Mr. Chairman, it is not the policy of this Government to pension these diplomates. Is it the theory on the other side that whoever is accredited by our Government to a foreign nation should save nothing from his salary? Is that the theory of the gentleman from Georgia? Is it the theory of the gentlemen upon that side?

Then of course the argument obtains that you would limit these offices to aristocrats and to moneyed men, because you put them on a salary where it is utterly impossible for them to accumulate anything. A man must have sufficient property for his support in old age and the support of his family, or else he can not take such a position as this.

It seems to me that argument advanced here adds additional force to the point already made, that this reduction of salaries limits the class from which you can take these officers to men of wealth.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of wealth or poverty. Since I have had the honor of being a member of this House I have learned that this is no place to speak well of wealth, while it is an admirable place to speak in defense of poverty. [Laughter.] I have never in my life found three hundred and twenty-five men together so uniformly the friends of the poor. [Renewed laughter.] In a country town they agree unanimously on one thing, and that is when a man dies to bury him. In the House of Representatives of the United States we are equally unanimous in being the friends of the poor man. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of wealth and poverty. It is a question of whether we shall be represented abroad. If I had my way—and I have not, for no doubt I would be wrong—I would not exact fees from the merchant or mariner. I would pay a fixed salary to your consuls and place them wherever the flag of this country floats at the masthead of an American ship engaged in our commerce and trade. If it were not a Presidential appointment I would have rigid rules of civil service applied to the appointment of a consular agent of this country abroad, and compel intelligent men to report progress of foreign countries, and upon their productions, commerce, and our relations thereto.

In reference to this amendment to the bill I speak to it with great reluctance. I said a few minutes ago I would not accredit one man to two different governments. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to appropriate $6,500 to one man to be minister at one place and consul at two other countries I think is a grave mistake. I know well the gentleman who represents this country at Athens. I know his fitness for the place, and I know that no man can represent this country at Athens as minister resident and at the same time perform the duties of consul to two other governments where we have trade while we have none with Greece. He would be an ornament to the office, and an ornamental foreign office would be very acceptable to my venerable friend before me. [Laughter.]

If we need a consul at Bucharest or Belgrade send one there, or if you can not send a consul send a commercial agent, but do not involve the minister at Greece in the necessity of traveling over disturbed countries four or five hundred miles to remedy injuries done to American merchants or mariners, because to go there he must go around by Vienna. That is a diplomatic gerrymander which should not be tolerated. [Laughter.] While the distinguished gentleman at Greece who represents us there, as the committee chooses to place him there as consul-general or resident minister, let it be so; but do not require him to go to other countries at long distances to look after the wants, necessities, and interests of American merchants when they go there to trade. That is all. There is nothing of riches or poverty in that. I am afraid to say anything about riches in this House. [Laughter.] Everybody is so fond of the poor man. God knows I agree with you there now. [Laughter and applause.] If you had not that affection for the poor man, many of you might not be here. Yet I think there are times when we could use the time of the Republic and attend to the public interests quite as well as when we exhaust our oratory, rhetoric, and eloquence in defending the poor man, although we are his friends. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BURNES. I have had a conference with my friend from Illinois, and I believe he desires no further time in debate. I therefore call for a vote.

Mr. HITT's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay, $5,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by inserting after line 40 the following:

For chargé d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BURNES. I think the gentleman had better withhold the amendment and offer it at the end of this provision; it does not properly, in my judgment, come in here.

Mr. HITT. Very well; at the suggestion of the gentleman in charge of the bill I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the secretaries of legations in Japan, China, Spain, Brazil, and Mexico, at $1,800 each; in all, $9,000.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 46, after the word "China," insert "$2,500 each," and in the forty-seventh line strike out the words "nine thousand" and insert "ten thousand four hundred;" so that it will read: "For salaries of the secretaries of legations in Japan and China, $2,500 each; Spain, Brazil, and Mexico, at $1,800 each; in all, $10,400."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the effect of that amendment would be to pay to the secretaries of legations in Japan and in China $2,500 a year, whereas by this bill provision is made that they shall receive only $1,800 per annum. At present the secretary of legation in China acts also as interpreter, and his entire compensation is $5,000. The secretary of legation in Japan now receives $2,500, and application has repeatedly been made from that legation on behalf of that officer that his compensation might be made more adequate for the necessary expenses involved in living in that costly country.

By further provisions in this bill, which I suppose will be adopted, the secretary of legation in China will be entirely prohibited from receiving any further compensation beyond that allowed in this paragraph. I am assured by many who are thoroughly conversant with the subject of which they speak that it will be impossible for a secretary of legation in China to live with his family and to act at necessary times as our minister in that country upon any such small compensation as that fixed in this bill. Indeed, it is probable that more than twice that sum would be deemed scanty in any other among the legations established there by foreign governments.

It is a place where attendants are necessary and are expensive; where the means of living cost far more than they do here; where the surroundings and methods of living of a man are not determined by himself, but by the circumstances in which he is placed. He is compelled as minister to receive our countrymen who go there, for it is a country without hotels, and where there are few, if any, American citizens resident at the capital who could extend hospitality to our countrymen visiting there.

He is there representing a great nation, if he be chargé. He is the medium between two nations closely connected by a large commerce, often with conflicting interests, and he may be intrusted with the conduct of important negotiations on the gravest questions arising between the two countries. He is located amid a numerous and able diplomatic corps, who are competing with him in gaining every advantage in negotiating with a government which is, as all know, ruled by a few individuals, as in all despotic countries, in dealing with whom a mistake in tact or judgment may lead to serious disadvantage to our interests.

We send out a diplomatic officer for serious business, not for display or pleasure; but we should provide for his decent, proper support in performing that duty, which may be of great, even of transcendent importance. Will we place him beside and in competition with a body of able, accomplished, well-paid rivals, who are struggling for the same advantages with that government for which he may be contending, and then fail to pay him enough for living respectably or for a decent manner of approaching the powers with which he has to treat?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire again to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that by reference to the law for the year of 1882 I find the secretaries of legation at Japan and China received $2,500 a year. Have our relations decreased? Has the business of those countries fallen off, or has the price of living diminished there to such an extent as to warrant this reduction? This precedent was established by a Democratic House and by a very economical Committee on Appropriations, and is upon our statute-books, and I would like to have the gentleman from Missouri assign to us the reasons for this change.

Mr. BURNES. I will give the gentleman from New York the only reason the committee had for this arrangement, and it is one that they deemed ample to warrant them in recommending it. We pay our secretaries of legation $1,800 a year, or 15 per cent. of the salary of the minister. This is the universal rule. I do not know whether it costs more to live as secretary of legation in China than in Austria, Spain, or any of those countries where we pay $1,800 a year. It is for the sake of uniformity and from the belief that a secretary in China should be placed upon no higher or lower basis than the secretary of legation to a second-class court at the same salary.

Mr. HISCOCK. But let me ask the gentleman whether in the case of these secretaries of legation it is not absolutely necessary that they should be persons of education or persons who understand the language of the country? If to a certain extent a scholar, really to a very high degree, is not required, and especially one having some knowledge of the language of the country? I ask him if he is prepared to advise this committee and the country if proper men to discharge these duties, duties of a delicate character no doubt, and difficult, can be secured for $1,800 a year?

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I answer the gentleman by saying that he can not find in China or Japan a single secretary of legation who understands the Chinese or Japanese language.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand one of them does.

Mr. BURNES. In consequence of which we provide both for secretaries of legation and for interpreters and maintain at each court a secretary of legation and an interpreter. So far as secretaries of legation are concerned, this bill proposes to place them on the same footing as all other secretaries of like class, and then gives them an interpreter besides, at a reasonable salary. I think that is sufficient. But certainly I have no feeling in the matter and know nothing more about it than any other gentleman on this floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri if he has reason for believing, in view of the salary having been fixed at $2,500 a year by the committee of which Mr. Atkins was chairman two years ago, that proper men can be obtained for the reduced salary?

Mr. BURNES. It is difficult for me to say. My information is that these salaries are sufficient. And I will say I have consulted a gentleman who has lived for years in China and who has been through Japan and Siam.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I ask the gentleman to communicate to the committee, that it may be informed on this subject, such information as he may have?

Mr. BURNES. I have the information that it is exceedingly difficult to get American interpreters. There is no difficulty about getting secretaries of legation. You can get them in as great plenty as you want; but the difficulty is to get interpreters. Secretaries are abundant. When you come to interpreters that is where you have the trouble.

Mr. HITT. Has the gentleman from Missouri not remarked the fact that for years past consuls of just the same grade are paid $3,500 in China and $2,000 in Europe; and will he permit me to add that I know of consuls who have been transferred from a post at $2,000 in Europe to a post at $3,500 in China who sent back complaints that they could not live at all as they had been accustomed to do, could not support their families there, and implored the Government to put them back?

Mr. BURNES. I will answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. KASSON. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri, that he may give us this information.

Mr. HISCOCK. We want information.

Mr. BURNES. So far as the rates paid to consuls are concerned, we pay by our present law as much to the consul-general in Montreal as we do to a consul-general or a consul in China. This is one of the beauties of our consular system.

Mr. HITT. Is the gentleman not aware that the consul-general at Montreal is the supervising officer of one-third of all the consulates in our consular system?

Mr. BURNES. And is the gentleman from Illinois not aware that the consuls are receiving not only the salaries this Congress appropriates but a large amount of official fees by the authority of the Department, without any report being made to Congress?

Mr. HITT. I do not understand that to be the fact. If I am permitted I would answer the inquiry more fully.

Mr. BURNES. I hope the committee will indulge the gentleman.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman asked me if all the consuls were not in receipt of official fees——

Mr. BURNES. I did not say "all."

Mr. HITT. I know whole countries where they do not receive one dollar of unofficial fees. And as to the official fees, it is expressly provided in the statute and in the regulations when and where they shall go to consuls; and that is a matter of public knowledge.

Mr. BURNES. I ask the gentleman again if the Secretary has informed this House of the extra amount of official fees which this House supposes always goes into the Treasury; if the Secretary has informed the House of the amount of official fees paid to consuls?

Mr. HITT. The Secretary has made a report, which is published, and which states the amount of official fees reported from every consulate in the world.

Mr. BURNES. Will my friend please turn to it? If it is there I have been unable to find it.

Mr. HITT. It is here. In the Register of the Department of State opposite the name of every consul appears the report of the official fees sent from that consulate during the year.

Mr. BURNES. But does the report show the amount of those official fees given to the consul?

Mr. HITT. That appears by reading the regulation which stands printed in full at the head of the list of consuls and which determines the rule in each particular case as to the application of the fees. And the compensation is given there also. Where a consul receives a large salary he receives no fees, but is required to account for every item. Where he receives a small salary there are certain regulations given there which clearly show the proportion he receives.

Mr. BURNES. I ask the gentleman the question again. Take the consulate at Hong-Kong, where the consul is now receiving $4,000 per annum, which salary is by this bill increased to $5,000 in recognition of the admirable work he has performed there. I ask the gentleman if he does not know that in addition to that salary the consul receives $1,500 of fees besides?

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman asks a question. He doubtless has the information himself, and I wish he would state to the House if that is a fact.

Mr. REED. Does that consul employ any clerk whom he pays out of those fees?

Mr. BURNES. This is a matter particularly within the knowledge of the State Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it not possible that the gentleman has made this mistake? Where consuls are located at different places they may have a chance to do business on their own account. They may act as commissioners to take testimony for private parties, to look after the execution of papers between private parties by whom they are known, and in that way they may accumulate something. Has not the gentleman mixed that up with official fees? Is not that the trouble with the gentleman?

Mr. HITT. The gentleman has spoken of the efficiency of our consul at Hong-Kong. The report before me shows that General Mosby, our consul at Hong-Kong, made no report of his official fees, and therefore I can not answer what disposition was made by the Department to defray the contingent and other expenses of that consulate without examining the records at the State Department. But that consul did not himself receive one cent of the official fees.

Mr. BURNES. I assure my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that he is in error, and it devolves upon me to defend that officer of our Government. The report of the consul at Hong-Kong is complete and perfect. In answer to my esteemed friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] I will say that the report of the Secretary of State shows that the salary of the consul at Hong-Kong is $4,000, and that in addition he receives unofficial fees amounting to about $1,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. Unofficial fees.

Mr. BURNES. Now I ask the gentleman to tell me what amount of official fees the consul receives?

Mr. HISCOCK. None, I guess.

Mr. HITT. What page is that?

Mr. BURNES. It is page 79. I assert as a fact, without knowing the extent to which it goes, because I find it in no report from the State Department, that there are consuls who, in addition to their salaries, receive a portion of the official fees they earn.

Mr. HITT. I will answer the gentleman, who is now speaking of official fees. As to unofficial fees, the State Department say, as appears by the document referred to by the gentleman, that our consul at Hong-Kong in addition to his salary receives unofficial fees; that is, certain moneys paid him by individuals who employ him to render legal services, which services have nothing to do with the Government, with commerce, or with public affairs, and that those fees amount perhaps to $1,500. Those are unofficial fees, payment for personal services rendered by the consul to Americans or any other persons who choose to ask him to perform services for them.

For example, if my friend from Missouri were passing through there, was unacquainted with any person, should be taken ill, wished to have his will drawn up, and could not, owing to the state of his health, use his own ample legal learning for that purpose, he might ask the consul to devote two or three days of his time to perform that private work for him, and then he would doubtless pay him something for it. The consuls receive such unofficial fees for service rendered to individuals who choose to ask them to perform it. Such fees doubtless are received by consuls in many places. The consul at Hong-Kong, that being a place frequented by many Americans, doubtless has opportunities to make a considerable sum in that way, and he says that he has so received $1,500. But in a majority of consulates there are no unofficial fees.

Mr. BURNES. In how large a minority?

Mr. HITT. In all large cities which are frequented by Americans who require to have deeds acknowledged, powers of attorney drawn up, wills made, and similar personal services, there are small fees paid to the consul, which in some cases amount to a considerable sum.

Mr. KASSON. Paid to the individual, not to the consul.

Mr. HITT. Yes; paid to the individual, who is employed because it is convenient, and people are disposed to trust him, rather than a foreign stranger, with their affairs.

Mr. CANNON. I want to go back just a minute to the amendment which is pending. Gentlemen have drifted off into a discussion about consuls. The amendment now pending has nothing to do with the official or unofficial fees of consuls. The present pay of the secretaries of legation to Japan and to China is and has been for a great many years $2,500 a year, and it was fixed at that amount when all these salaries were revised by a Democratic Congress in 1879. I do not believe that their salaries should be decreased now to $1,800 a year, and I will tell you why.

A secretary of legation to China, who may be appointed to-day, has to pay for his passage out of his own private funds, a matter of from $350 to $500, before he commences his duties there. When mustered out of office he must pay as much more to get back home. He must pay all his own expenses there. There is not a single cent of fees, official or unofficial, that he can get.

Now, when you say that he must serve in that country, paying the expenses required for traveling to and from that country, paying his own expenses there, for the same price which you pay to a fourth-class clerk in a Department here at Washington, where the expense of living is much cheaper, where his responsibilities are fixed and can not be increased, when you say that this secretary of legation, who is liable to be called on when there is a vacancy to act as minister during the continuance of that vacancy, shall bear these burdens and pay these expenses, and for the sake of uniformity only, as my friend says, shall have $700 cut off from the already meager salary he now receives, I think you are inflicting a hardship upon these officials, and therefore I hope the committee will not sustain the provision of the bill or that my friend from Missouri will allow the amendment to prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to argue this question any further. I wish merely to talk a little to my friend in charge of this bill. I know that no one of us likes to do a mean thing toward a man, young or old, who is absolutely in our power. I point to the way we treat our various employés about this House, our clerks, doorkeepers, &c. We not only allow them their salaries, but at the end of the session we vote them an extra allowance in view of their having to go to their homes and perhaps return at another session. We are not mean on either side of the House touching our employés here. Now, in our foreign service are some young men who have to travel at their own expense thousands of miles across land and sea. Their allowance hitherto has varied somewhere from $2,100 to $2,600. And you propose to treat them not so well as you do some of the messengers about your committee-rooms and about this House. Is it right? You have it in your power to do so; but is it right to cut them down to starvation wages?

I know some of these men. I see that one of them at Austria is put down in this bill to $1,500. He is obliged either to hire furnished rooms or to furnish them at his own expense. He has to pay for his living according to the rate of expenses prevailing in that country. He has to have certain facilities and a certain decency in all his arrangements. Now do you believe that one of these young men can be sent from Iowa or Illinois across the water to these distant countries, can live properly there, and come home again at the end of his service, and manage to do all this on $1,500 or $1,800 a year?

Mr. BURNES. We simply follow the statute.

Mr. KASSON. Oh, no. This allowance is not 15 per cent. According to the statute, as it has existed, the salary of this officer at Vienna has been, I believe, something more than $2,100. The gentleman is mistaken in his theory of percentage as to secretaries of legation.

Mr. BURNES. Will the gentleman allow me to read the provision of the Revised Statute?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURNES (reading):

> And unless when otherwise provided by law, ministers resident and commissioners shall be entitled to compensation at the rate of 75 per cent., chargé d'affaires at the rate of 50 per cent., and secretaries of legation at the rate of 15 per cent. of the amounts allowed to embassadors, envoys extraordinary, and ministers plenipotentiary to the said countries respectively.

Mr. KASSON. That provision applies where no other provision is made by law. But provision has been made in accordance with the character of the places where these secretaries live. The trouble is that the committee has departed from the law by disregarding the exceptions which the law says ought to be made.

Now, I know and my friend from Missouri knows that the rate of compensation proposed in the bill is not adequate in view of the expenses of traveling to those countries and living there. Our clerks here in Washington, our employés about this House, are paid a higher rate than these men who are subjected to these extraordinary expenses. I am not going to make any motion at all unless my friend from Missouri agrees to it.

But this is not fair treatment of these poor victims of your power, say what you will. You can of course, if you choose, cut them down to $1,000. But the question is, is it right? I ask you to do what is right in itself. I believe it can not be asserted that any one of these officers in any foreign country is now paid extravagantly, when you take into account the long distances traveled and the inevitable expenses of living at the points where they are located. I appeal to my friend to consider this matter and put these salaries at what they ought to be—$2,000, $2,400, or whatever is proper. I am not going to make any motion myself; I want the gentleman to do what is right and proper.

Mr. BURNES. The committee will see in what painful circumstances I am placed. Nothing would afford me more pleasure than to yield to the almost irresistible request of my friend from Iowa. I, too, realize that the salaries of these secretaries of legation are low. If I had the power I would raise them all.

Mr. KASSON. I think you have; I think the House will readily agree to it.

Mr. BURNES. I am not speaking of that. I am speaking of uniformity. So long as we have a statute that regulates the salaries of the secretaries of legation, and so long as we appropriate, as a rule, $1,800 at the second-class missions, I do not see any reason why we should appropriate any more at a second-class mission in China or Japan.

Mr. KASSON. I am ready to accept the provision of the statute as to these places. I do not ask a single dime additional. I ask the gentleman to allow the bill to conform to the statute.

Mr. BURNES. Let me say that the law provides $3,000 for the secretary of legation in China and $2,500 for the secretary of legation in Japan. Now, will anybody tell me the reason that justifies the fixing of one of these salaries at $3,000 and the other at $2,500?

Mr. KASSON. I answer——

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman will excuse me a moment. Why should we pay more for this service in China than for the service in Japan? Why should we pay as much for the service in Constantinople as in China and Japan? Why should we not reduce these salaries to the level of the other secretaries of legation?

Mr. KASSON. It raises the old question, Mr. Chairman, of whether the gentleman who is charged with the entire investigation of the subject ought to change the system. Here, for example, in Constantinople, our secretary of legation is consul-general. The duties of that office are added to his functions as secretary of legation.

Mr. BURNES. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. KASSON. I take pleasure in being interrupted.

Mr. BURNES. I trust the gentleman knows, for I have overwhelming facts to show the truth of the statement, that the duties of this consul-general have no more to do with those of secretary of legation than any other two incongruous matters possibly can have.

Mr. KASSON. I can only say I am quite sure my friend is mistaken on that subject. There are distinct duties as consul-general and distinct duties as secretary of legation, distinct sets of books and distinct work in the two different capacities.

But to return to the subject. China is more expensive and more dangerous to the health of an American than Japan. Japan is a cheaper place and easier of access. All these questions have been gone over by Committees on Foreign Affairs heretofore. We are met with propositions attempting to change without full consideration what has been done after full consideration. But I do not wish to cut off my friend from Missouri. I do wish to ask gentlemen of the committee if it is right to take these men because they are in your power and treat them as victims by putting them down to a salary where they can not live decently. I say it is not in any gentlemanly breast that any such thing should be done toward those who are absolutely within your power.

Mr. BURNES. What would you like to have?

Mr. KASSON. Where you say $1,800, I would say $2,000; and where you say $1,800 you ought to say $2,400.

Mr. HITT's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the secretaries of the legations in Japan, China, Spain, Brazil, and Mexico, at $1,800 each, in all $9,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to add the following:

For salary of clerk to the legation in Spain, $1,200.

Mr. RANDALL. That paragraph has been passed.

Mr. HITT. I rose in time, but the Clerk read so fast it was passed before I could get recognition from the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be received.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BURNES. Since this bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations I have had an interview with our minister to Madrid, and he gave me satisfactory reasons in favor of accepting this amendment. And with the consent of my associates on the committee I will do so.

Mr. RANDALL. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BURNES. I will say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania that I feel confident our minister to Spain at this time requires this assistance.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman need say no more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the second secretaries to the legations at London, Paris, and Berlin, at $1,800 each $5,400.

Mr. LYMAN. I move the following amendment:

In lines 53 and 54 strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand," and in line 54 strike out "five thousand four hundred" and insert "six thousand."

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have just received from Berlin a letter from a friend of mine in whom I have great confidence, in which occurs the following passage:

I hear on good authority that the House Committee on Appropriations talk of cutting down the present $2,000 pay of three second secretaries of legation at London, Paris, and Berlin to $1,800. Now, really, this is too pitiful a piece of cheese-paring. What is $600 to the American nation in proportion to the work these fellows do? Now, I have had nearly seven years' experience of the matter—have during that time known all three of these second secretaries and their duties, and can certify that these places are no sinecures. They in fact do more of the work than the ministers do, and the least agreeable part of it. The smallness of the pay prevents any married man without means taking the place, and they have not the advantage of occasional chargé d'affaires's pay as the first secretaries have.

It will be seen by this, Mr. Chairman, that these gentlemen have onerous duties to perform, that they are living in expensive capitals, and get only $2,000 now, and yet it is proposed to cut that meager salary down to $1,800. I can assure my friend from Missouri that this gentleman is a person of great experience and education, and I hope he will make no objection to keeping the salaries as they are under the present law.

Mr. CURTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIN. Have you sufficient information before you to show that a second secretary of legation is necessary at Berlin? I do not know how it may be at London, but at Berlin it seems unnecessary.

Mr. BURNES. I am perfectly certain in my own mind that we ought to have abolished all three of these secretaries. But it was only in deference to the opinions and wishes of gentlemen who took a different view of the matter that they were allowed to remain.

But the letter from my friend of Massachusetts only in my judgment advances an additional reason why they ought to be abolished. Whoever sent that dispatch or letter states this absolutely, that this second secretary of legation does more work than the minister. It is for that very reason that the secretaryship ought to be abolished altogether.

The minister ought to do his own work, and if he did it with the assistance of one able secretary of legation he would get along much better with his work. But having two he leaves the work largely to them, and I venture to assert that if you gave him a dozen that he would do twelve times less of his own work than he now does. They ought to be abolished. For uniformity sake, however, we reduce them to the same standard of salary that we pay to secretaries of legations at second-class missions. Either take them at the salary fixed, or else let us abolish the whole thing.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the reason for the existence of the officer to whom reference has been made as being wholly unnecessary is that it has been found in these three legations there is so much business that clerical assistance had to be obtained to aid the minister. It has at times not only required two secretaries, but a very large clerical assistance in addition. Cases have arisen where this regular official force has largely been increased, as for instance at the time of the siege of Paris, when our legation had necessarily to employ a number of persons; when the duties were so enormous as to absolutely demand it. In consequence of the great number of Americans who came to Berlin, Paris, and London, it was long ago found necessary to have a third person who could personally represent the legation at any place where it might be required to appear. That was one reason primarily for having this additional officer, who was a diplomatic officer to that extent, although he did the work of a clerk and received what is scarce more than a clerk's pay.

If gentlemen could examine for a moment the enormous correspondence carried on by these legations with persons in the countries where they are located, and also in regard to home affairs, the necessity would be evident for giving a force adequate to enable the minister to discharge that work readily and promptly. It would be impossible, I am sure, during the greater part of the year for the minister with one secretary only and a messenger to get through with the daily routine work. Besides, the expenses of living in the cities where these officers are required to live are necessarily high; rents are high, living is expensive, and the amount now paid is barely sufficient for their support. As my friend from Massachusetts has said in regard to one of them I may say of the others, one of whom I spoke of yesterday, they are men of ability, experience, and great working capacity, and they do their work faithfully and deserve fair compensation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts which has been read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

And no secretary or second secretary of any legation shall be entitled to or receive any compensation over and above his salary as such secretary for acting as chargé d'affaires during the temporary or other absence of the minister to whose duties he may succeed: Provided, That such minister, from his own salary, may compensate him for any such service. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with this provison shall be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read and insert:

For chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. REED. It had just as well be decided now.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any existing law authorizing this expenditure?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to be cited to it.

Mr. CANNON. It is in the current law. This is a mere appropriation of $20,000 for this service as it has been for twenty-five years.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to discussing the question upon its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The object of this appropriation has been, and is now, if made, to pay secretaries of legation, when there is no minister at the court, one-half the pay the minister is entitled to receive when he is there.

To illustrate: We have at present no minister or envoy extraordinary at Berlin. The secretary of legation, who gets $2,600 a year, is both secretary of legation and minister. The pay of the minister is $17,500. So that we have now, and have had for a month or two, and probably will have for some time longer, at Berlin, as the representative of this Government, an official getting $2,600 a year for doing his own work and who is acting also as minister.

Under the law and the regulations heretofore while the secretary of legation is so acting he gets one-half of the pay the minister receives. I think he ought to get it, and I propose by this amendment to continue the appropriation as it has always been for that purpose.

I can not say anything more about it. That is all there is of it. I do not know of any good reason why we should forsake this practice that has obtained under all administrations and under all political parties. I think it is just and proper and right. This Government of ours, with its large population and great wealth and liberality and with its immense revenues, can not afford to say and ought not to say to a twenty-six-hundred-dollar secretary of legation, "Perform the duties of a man who if there would get $17,500 a year, and you shall not have a cent extra over your small salary that you get as secretary of legation." I would not say that to an employé in my private business if he was running it. The gentleman from Missouri would scorn to say to any man that lives, if he was privately employing him in his business, that he would apply the rule to him that he proposes to apply on the part of a great country to its citizen and servant. And there is no occasion why a man should do an unseemly thing or a parsimonious thing for the whole people that he would scorn to do for himself.

Mr. BURNES. We have reached a provision in this bill, or a question growing out of a provision in the estimates, to which I desire specially to call the attention of the committee. It is not $10,000, it is not $20,000, but it is a principle that is deeper and broader and wider than money. This provision, Mr. Chairman, is in the nature, to some extent, of what was called the salary-grab. It is for constructive service. It is an encouragement for the minister to abandon his duty to the secretary of legation. It is a premium to the minister for entering into contests for positions in the country where he lives. It is a premium to him to write books. It is a premium to him to become a candidate for a literary position in a foreign country. It is a premium to him to abandon his duties and go off into other countries on pleasure trips, abandoning the important interests of his country where he is appointed its representative.

Mr. LONG. Does he not lose his salary in the mean time?

Mr. BURNES. He does not lose his salary in the mean time. If you could show me an instance in which the minister ever failed to draw his full salary I would see some reason for this appropriation. But you find the minister yields his place; the secretary of legation asks him to yield the place. My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] knows full well that there is a great desire on the part of the secretary of legation to get the minister to go abroad to travel over the continent if he is in England. Why? So that he may have an increased salary for doing the work of the minister. Now, in answer to my other distinguished friend from Illinois——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question just there? How can that be so when this whole appropriation is only $20,000?

Mr. BURNES. I answer the gentleman, here is an appropriation asked for of $20,000 for the purpose of making increased payments to gentlemen for doing the work of the ministers. That is what this is for. You appropriate $20,000 for the express purpose of paying gentlemen for doing the work of other people. Is not that so?

Mr. CANNON. Who is doing the work of the minister at Berlin when there is no minister there but this twenty-six-hundred-dollar employé?

Mr. BURNES. Is there anybody drawing the salary of the minister at Berlin? Is not the salary there sufficient to pay for the services rendered without any further appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. That can not be used under this bill. Under this bill not one dollar of the salary of the minister at Berlin can be used by the secretary of legation or anybody else while there is a vacancy.

Mr. BURNES. That depends altogether on the action of the President.

Mr. REED. Not at all.

Mr. BURNES. The President can give him an appointment that will enable him to draw the salary of the minister or anything else he chooses.

Mr. REED. What appointment can he give him?

Mr. BURNES. Any appointment within his gift.

Mr. REED. What appointment can he give him? I should like the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. BURNES. He can give him the office of minister if it is vacant.

Mr. REED. But suppose the President does not consider he ought to be appointed minister; but in the mean time, while he is selecting a minister, it is necessary somebody should perform the functions. You can not be appointing ministers and removing them every other day.

Mr. BURNES. I do not know as to that. If they were removed every other day we might get an improved service.

Mr. REED. Is that the gentleman's idea of conducting the public service?

Mr. BURNES. It may be so.

Mr. REED. It is certainly a very interesting idea.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. Might not a contingency arise in which the dignity of this nation might require the technical office of minister to remain vacant for a time?

Mr. BURNES. In that case, in an instant, by telegraph, the President can order him to the position.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And should there not during that time be a secretary of legation there?

Mr. BURNES. There is a secretary of legation there.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And should he not be paid?

Mr. BURNES. There comes up the question again. We hire a gentleman as a secretary of legation and give him a salary for performing the duty of that office. Because he occasionally is called upon to perform some higher duties, or because he is nominally the representative of this Government at that court, doing no more work perhaps than before——

Mr. REED. Perhaps.

Mr. BURNES. Because he is technically called to the performance of more honorable and higher duties, he should not therefore be paid an increased salary. We hire all his time, and this proposition is to pay him for constructive services. I protest against any such payment for any such thing.

Mr. HITT. It is perhaps well to state to the House distinctly what is the basis of the appropriation of $20,000 which it is proposed to make for "chargés d'affaires ad interim" who are acting as ministers abroad. It is to enable them to meet other and additional expenditures imposed by these wider duties, expenses which they can not escape; that is the simple object of it. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania before me [Mr. CURTIN], who has been an honored and experienced minister of this country abroad, knows that well; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is familiar with the fact.

I do not wish to name the men in the service who have to meet these expenses; but I may say generally that a secretary of legation who is charged with the duty of a minister is also charged with the burdens of a minister, and among those burdens are expenses which he can not escape. If he should endeavor to avoid certain outlays he would make himself contemptible; he would be doing that which we at home would regard as ignoble on his part.

Many gentlemen in the course of this debate yesterday and to-day have spoken of our diplomatic officers making a display of their money in the entertainment of Americans traveling abroad. That is not the place where the money necessarily goes. It is where a minister is entertained not for himself but purely as an official of this Government that the duty of fitly reciprocating is an obligation he can not escape. If he is so entertained repeatedly by other officials and does not entertain any of them he marks himself as the one in the whole corps of diplomatic officers who never reciprocates official hospitalities. Do you want your representatives to exhibit such an instance of what would certainly be called social meanness?

Such expenses are unavoidable, and they are not to be met by a clerk's salary. The duty of a minister at the place where you have sent him makes it incumbent upon him to do the best he can to properly represent this country. Sometimes a minister leaves his post for the purpose of going home. We generally think it is a good thing on the part of an absent American to seize the first occasion to breathe the air of home and to do it as often as he can. The distance is so great that it takes weeks of time to go and return. The law says that such time of absence from the post shall never exceed sixty days, and the absence then is taken only upon permission or leave granted by the Secretary of State.

In such a case, as also in the case of a vacancy in the post by the death of the minister or from whatever cause it may arise, these other officers, the secretaries, are called upon to bear a burden of responsibility, to perform additional labor and to meet additional expenses from which they can not escape. This appropriation is not made for any individual; it is not for salaries. It is a sum which, if not called for in consequence of vacancies or absences of chief officers of legation, will be unexpended. For long years it has been the custom of Congress to consider this a proper, just, and necessary part of the appropriations for the support of our foreign service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was to strike out the following:

And no secretary or second secretary of any legation shall be entitled to or receive any compensation over and above his salary as such secretary for acting as chargé d'affaires during the temporary or other absence of the minister to whose duties he may succeed: Provided, That such minister, from his own salary, may compensate him for any such service. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with this provision shall be, and are hereby, repealed.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, $20,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 51.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

And the foregoing appropriations for envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, chargés d'affaires, ministers resident and consuls-general, secretaries of legation, and interpreters shall, after June 30, 1884, be the salaries of each officer respectively; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict therewith, or which allow a larger salary to any officer or employé hereinbefore named, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. REED. I desire to make a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. The point of order I make is that the paragraph just read proposes to repeal existing law and is not germane to this bill. It does not change any amount of money carried by this bill, and therefore does not come under the head of retrenchment.

The Chair will make the distinction. This paragraph is no part of the appropriation bill proper; it refers entirely to future salaries, and is the establishment of a law to govern future salaries which are to be passed upon by other Congresses. It does not, therefore, reduce expenditures in any respect provided by the rule.

The Committee on Appropriations has no right to report on an appropriation bill a general law of this character. There is now an existing law which fixes the salaries of the various ministers, envoys extraordinary, &c. The Committee on Appropriations have a right to propose a change of that law if such change diminishes expenditures, but they have no right to propose a general law covering future appropriation bills, because the diminution of expenditure made by a change of law must be upon the appropriation bill itself in which such change of law is proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] desire to be heard?

Mr. BURNES. Although inexperienced in parliamentary law, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to two propositions. By the foregoing provisions in this bill we have reduced salaries, and having reduced certain salaries we have to that extent changed these statutes fixing those salaries. Therefore we desire to repeal those provisions of the statutes. I may say further that the present provision of this bill is but a copy of a provision in the appropriation act of the last Congress.

Mr. REED. By referring to the third clause of Rule XXI the Chair will see the sole ground on which the Committee on Appropriations can assume jurisdiction to report new legislation in appropriations bills. We have not in any previous part of this bill changed any existing law. The gentleman from Missouri is entirely mistaken in saying that we have changed any general law. We have simply declined to make the appropriations which the general law requires. Now it is proposed to make this bill the general law upon the subject; and this, it seems to me, we have no right to do except in accordance with the rules of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The provision of the rule to which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] refers is, as the Chair understands, the following:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It seems to the Chair that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair is ready to hear from the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other gentleman on the point.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman having charge of this bill to omit in this paragraph the words "after June 30, 1884." Those words were inserted lest by their omission it might appear that the salaries for the current year were to be affected. The object was to obviate a doubt; but I do not think there could be any difficulty on that point, because this bill makes appropriations of salaries for the next fiscal year only. If the gentleman from Missouri would strike out the words I have indicated the provision will not then be subject to the point of order.

Mr. BURNES. I move to strike out those words.

Mr. REED. What words?

Mr. RANDALL. The words fixing the date.

Mr. REED. Which words are those?

Mr. RANDALL. The proposition is to make the paragraph read—

And the foregoing appropriations for envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, chargés d'affaires, ministers resident and consuls-general, secretaries of legation, and interpreters shall be the salaries of each officer, respectively, &c.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the gentleman had better put in the words "for the next fiscal year."

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, no; I do not want those words in.

Mr. REED. We are making suggestions in a friendly way; and I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not try to get his personal views in here.

Mr. RANDALL. I never have "personal views" to carry out on this floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. Unless the words suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] be inserted the provision will still be subject to the same point of order.

Mr. REED. Certainly it will. What the provision is designed to cover, I understand, is the salaries which have already been reduced, to prevent any suit in the Court of Claims for the difference. To that of course I can have no objection, because that has been the vote of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. That is just it.

Mr. REED. Then suppose you insert the words "for the next fiscal year?" That is what the bill covers. In that way you would remove all ambiguity.

Mr. RANDALL. We want to change the existing law as to the appropriations made in this bill.

Mr. REED. Then you should make the provision read, that these shall be the salaries of these officers respectively for the next fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that is not necessary. It seems to me the point of order is avoided by striking out the words I have indicated.

Mr. REED. It does not avoid the point of order, unless it is equivalent to what I suggest.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a motion to strike out the words indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. I suggest that strictly it will be necessary for the gentleman from Missouri to propose a new paragraph, because the decision of the Chair sustaining the point of order upon this paragraph takes it out of the bill I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he insert after the word "respectively" the words "for the ensuing fiscal year."

Mr. BURNES. I move to amend by striking out the words suggested by the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, "after June 30, 1884."

Mr. REED. I make my point of order again upon this provision:

And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict therewith, or which allow a larger salary to any officer or employé hereinbefore named, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The point of order remains the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion with the words stricken out there is no affirmative declaration in this act which will apply to other officers than those for the present year.

Mr. REED. Permit me. Here is the last clause:

And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict therewith, or which allow a larger salary to any officer or employé hereinbefore named, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Now, that is not a repeal pro tanto. It is an absolute repeal, and is within the decision of the Chair. If the first clause was in order the Chair would be correct; but taking the last clause, that is a general repealing act.

The CHAIRMAN. But repeals nothing inconsistent with this act. There is nothing inconsistent with this act affecting the compensation of officers for any other year than this year, as the Chair understands the bill.

Mr. REED. But it being once inconsistent this clause causes it to be repealed, and if repealed it is repealed altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair unfortunately differs from the gentleman from Maine as to the construction of the act with those words out, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURNES. By consent those words are to be taken out.

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair understands, there being no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

After June 30, 1884, consuls-general and consuls appointed to the ports and places hereinafter named shall be entitled to annual salaries, respectively, of such amount to each as Congress may annually appropriate; and the President may substitute a commercial agent or a consul-general for any consul at any port or place named in Schedule B or C, and pay the appropriated salary of any such consul to such substitute; and hereafter said schedules and the appropriations for the payment of consuls-general and consuls shall read as follows.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order in regard to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. The point I desire to make is this: The paragraph states, after June 30, 1884, consuls-general and consuls appointed to the ports and places hereinafter named shall be entitled to annual salaries, respectively, of such amount to each as Congress may annually appropriate. Now, there is as I understand an existing law conferring upon consuls particular salaries. That law it is proposed to repeal.

Under the rules of this House the whole subject of foreign affairs, the fixing of salaries of consuls as distinguished from the annual appropriations to be made for the same, is under the control of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but this amendment of the law takes the whole subject out of the control of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and places it in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. I mention that not because of its reference to the point of order directly, but because it is descriptive of the action and shows the Chair the whole point in the case. The law now fixes certain rates of salary, and this proposes to fix them annually in the appropriation bill. That is, it is a change of existing law and not merely in reference to this bill, but to all future bills in the House. That being opposed to existing law, it is perfectly evident there is no point of retrenchment which can be suggested, because there is no reason to suppose there will be any.

Mr. CANNON. I hope we may have order.

Mr. REED. The point I was trying to make, if the Chair pleases, is this: It is necessary there should be retrenchment possible on the face of the proposed change of law, and that retrenchment should be commensurate with the change. Now, no man can say there is any retrenchment in transfer of the appropriations from the law as it now exists to the appropriation bills of future Congresses. The Chair has already settled the principle upon which this clause must go out.

Mr. RANDALL. I must confess I see a difficulty about this provision which has not yet been alluded to. I fear if it is inserted it might be within the range of permitting some subsequent Congress to raise salaries contrary to the rule. But I wish to remind the gentleman from Maine this very language appears in the law for the current year.

It was not objected to at the time. I think it was in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe it is in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. It comes as a legacy from the last Appropriations Committee. We have merely repeated it in this act.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say in reference to the salaries fixed last year they were substantially agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am not mistaken that in almost every instance they were agreed upon by the two committees. I might also say in this connection that, as far as my memory serves me, there was no objection from the other side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Because we had great confidence in you.

Mr. HISCOCK. Thank you.

Mr. RANDALL. I mean what I say in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that under this language it is perfectly plain that any law which now exists fixing the salaries of these officers is repealed by the provision under consideration, and that a future Congress would have no guide, but could reduce or increase these salaries at pleasure.

The Chair is not familiar with the appropriation bill referred to, but will ask the gentleman from New York if it is his understanding that the last bill contains this clause?

Mr. HISCOCK. My recollection is that it does, or that it is the law of some previous year.

Mr. REED. Then this is not in opposition to the existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no information upon that subject, except such as may be furnished by gentlemen themselves.

Mr. REED. But this whole bill has been discussed upon the basis of the law established in 1879, and if that be true that this provision existed in a law subsequent to that period, then there has been a misapprehension somewhere.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care whether the provision here referred to goes out or not.

Mr. REED. But what I say is that if these salaries are not based upon the law of 1879 all of the talk which has been had about this special law of 1879 is incorrect. But I heard these gentlemen of the Committee on Foreign Affairs discussing the question from that standpoint and got my information from them.

Mr. RANDALL. I have, of course, nothing to do with the fact to which the gentleman from Maine refers; but the objection I have made, it seems to me, must be manifest to any person upon consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask to have pointed out the provision of the law——

Mr. BURNES. In order to settle this matter I will propose to strike out the following words:

Of such amount to each as Congress may annually appropriate.

And insert—

Shall be entitled to salaries respectively, as follows.

That will obviate the objection of the distinguished gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. That confirms my objection.

Mr. HISCOCK. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the only effect of either of these provisions is to prevent a subsequent Congress, if they see fit to do so, from increasing the salaries of some of these officers.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me interrupt the gentleman to say that I am not clear on that point, whether they would not have power to increase them under the law; and the objection to it, if that be so, would be that it would vacate a rule of the House in that respect which has operated so beneficially.

Mr. HISCOCK. It must be apparent to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whose experience in this connection has been large, that it is absolutely necessary at times to change the compensation paid to officers of the diplomatic and consular service. It seems to me it would be bad legislation now to put into this bill, in view of the radical reductions which have been made by the committee this year—that it would be unwise to put in here, since those reductions are recommended, a provision that would render it impossible for the next or any subsequent Congress to increase these salaries if they sought to do so. Of course if this permanent legislation remains they would go out on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to correct a statement which I made. I learned from a member of the Committee on Appropriations that the provision to which reference was made was in the law of last year. But I find upon a personal examination of the statutes that it does not there appear.

Mr. HISCOCK. It will be found in a previous year.

Mr. RANDALL. Possibly in a previous year; but my information came to me, as I have said, from a member of the committee, who was evidently mistaken, for upon an examination of the law I do not find it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Perhaps it is true that we put it into the first consular and diplomatic bill prepared by the committee, and since it was permanent legislation the second bill prepared upon the same basis did not contain the provision. It would not be deemed necessary if in a previous bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think that the gentleman from New York will find on an examination that the provision is not in either bill. I have examined both and I find no law since 1879 relating to the subject that changes the original law.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wanted to correct myself in the same presence and as fully and completely as I could in view of the statement I had originally made on information.

Mr. REED. I will now, after all of this explanation, withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being withdrawn, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE B.

For salaries of the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, and Rio de Janeiro, at $6,000 each, $24,000.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 100 insert the following:
"For salary of the agent and consul-general at Cairo, $5,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the point of order, not knowing what the existing law is on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. REED. I object to the point of order being reserved. Let us have the point of order made and know what we are going on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not sure what the state of the law is on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no information as to that.

Mr. HITT. The amendment I offer is copied from the appropriation act for the current year. It is part of the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Indiana shows that the amendment would change existing law the Chair can not sustain the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not say it changes the law. I presume if the last act appropriated for this office it might be fairly inferred it was authorized by some statute; and the gentleman from Illinois states it is appropriated for in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. HITT. The amendment is framed in the language of the act which is now the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not press the point of order.

Mr. HITT. Our representative in Egypt at this time is by the present bill stricken from the list of diplomatic agents. Instead of a consul-general and diplomatic agent we have substituted here a consul at Cairo, receiving a compensation of $2,000. The importance of the office has been recognized by many Congresses in succession. It has been long established. There is a vast number of our countrymen who visit that region every year. The government there, though it is nominally a part of the Turkish Empire, is in fact an entirely independent government; and all the other powers of the world are represented there by diplomatic agents. If we should withdraw ours we put ourselves in a peculiarly inconsistent position.

Americans in that country by the capitulations and treaties are exempt from the operation of local law; and this officer, this consul-general and diplomatic agent, is a judge over Americans who are defendants in criminal cases. At the same time there is a mixed tribunal there, or a commission, made up of men of different countries, with the assent of the Egyptian Government, to which we have named several judges—Americans—who sit on that commission. Those judgeships become from time to time vacant. If we withdraw our diplomatic agent we make an end of diplomatic relations with the Government of the Khédive, and he will certainly fill the place of the next American who drops out by a man from Italy, Spain, Austria, or some other nation, and hereafter Americans in that country will cease to have a judge who is an American to pass upon their interests, but will be judged wholly by foreigners.

There are many duties which devolve upon this officer as the chief of the consulates in Egypt. I believe there are nine consular posts in Egypt under his supervision. The business in that aspect is of some, though not great, importance. But the primary and great duty of that officer is to look to the rights of American citizens, who are in that country in considerable numbers. His diplomatic duties concern our relations with Egypt and have of late dealt with all the body of questions relating to the Suez Canal and its effects upon our interests and commerce there and elsewhere.

I do not know whether it is worth while, with the evident determination of the majority here, to move to continue this officer. But I do my duty in offering this amendment, believing the post to be one of great importance, that belief coinciding with the judgment of many Congresses that have gone before us.

Mr. BURNES. I have noticed that in all the papers that have come to this House from the State Department—and I confess I have noticed something of the same spirit in the argument of the gentlemen on the other side—I have noticed that in the advocacy of missions or legations the argument is used that we have delicate commercial interests to be subserved. Now that we have passed from the ministerial portion of the bill, I find that the argument comes that we have delicate diplomatic functions at Cairo and at places where we should suppose commercial interests had only to be considered.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the most startling and wasteful expenditure of money that has ever been made by any State Department that I can find any record of since the beginning of this Government. I propose to call the attention of this committee to an outrage and a shame.

As to this consulate at Cairo, it should be stated, Mr. Chairman, to the committee that Egypt and Cairo are subject to the Ottoman Empire; that the Ottoman Empire in turn is dominated by England, as we all know. Therefore, if we have any diplomatic labors to perform as to that country, in God's name let us perform them either at Constantinople or London. What diplomatic relations can we have with the inhabitants of Cairo? Have they a government there that amounts to anything, a government that can act upon any international question? None whatever. Then we need no diplomacy there. Let our minister at Constantinople attend to our business in Egypt, because that country is subject to the domination of the Ottoman Empire.

But, sir, a consulate has been maintained at Cairo. And to give character to the consul or consul-general it is said that he is a diplomatic agent, whatever that is. What have we done in the way of supporting that diplomatic agent? First, he has had a salary of $5,000 a year; next, we have allowed him for clerk-hire $1,200 a year; then for contingent expenses, G. P. Pomeroy, consul-general, $254.87; contingent expenses, Comanos, vice-consul-general, $129.52; other contingent expenses, $2,505.48; lost by exchanging money in sending his returns home, $161.11; compensation while waiting instructions, $1,657.62; expenses of interpreters, guards, &c., $500; loss by exchange $4.52.

The business of this consulate for three-quarters of the year—because this diplomatic agent was not able in the press of business to report for the last quarter of the year ending June last—the business for three-quarters of the year was $202.50, while the expenditures were $11,413.12. I ought to say that recently, since it was seen that these matters were to be seriously and soberly looked into, a report has come for the remaining quarter of the year, and it swells the receipts from the diplomatic agent and consul-general at Cairo to the amount of $359.50.

I find from the report of the Fifth Auditor that that consul-general has afforded no relief whatever to seamen, has collected no wages for seamen. In short, I defy the gentleman to show that he has done anything except to spend this vast amount of money and to protect a few distinguished travelers from America, and perhaps extend hospitalities to Arabs down there on the banks of the Nile. This is the consul-general, the diplomatic agent of this great Government, who is to be maintained at a place dominated by two other countries, and which is of no more diplomatic importance than the far-off islands of the Arctic Ocean.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], as I always do, with interest. I have also listened to my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], who has had great experience in connection with the foreign service of this Government, having been for some years at Paris, later Assistant Secretary of State, and still later a member of this House and a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. In my opinion he has had opportunities for a better practical as well as theoretical knowledge of our foreign affairs, not deriving that knowledge merely from three months' time, more or less, spent in the preparation of an appropriation bill, but having passed a good part of his lifetime in our foreign service.

I was interested in his statement in regard to the duties of our consul-general at Cairo. I had understood before, but I understand it more clearly now, that the consul-general at Cairo is not only a consul but a judge. It is true he does not collect fees, as my friend from Missouri complains, nor does he relieve shipwrecked seamen. If I recollect aright Cairo is away up the river Nile, and if there were any seamen to be relieved they would have to go up there on wagons or on donkeys.

The duty of this consul-general is to act as consul and as judge under our treaties. When you take him away you say to the American citizens there resident that they shall not have the protection which our country has granted to them by treaty and by law, whether they be permanent residents there or merely travelers.

Now I do not want to say anything further about this matter. I do not think I have said anything that will affect this Committee of the Whole. I think this bill is to stand, perhaps from beginning to end, at least in these particulars, as it was reported by the Committee on Appropriations, after the investigation given to it by my friend from Missouri of three months, more or less. And I do not think that although an angel might come down with all knowledge of the past and of the present and of what is to be in the future, and should demonstrate the crying necessity for the law and the service to remain as it is in this and other respects, he would have as much effect upon this House as a man would have on the rock of Gibraltar if he stood there and tilted broom-straws against it.

Mr. LAIRD. I have heard the statements made by the two gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. HITT and Mr. CANNON], and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BURNES] what are the facts in regard to the duties of the consul-general at Cairo?

Mr. BURNES. In answer to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] I beg to say that we provide a consul for Cairo, and so far as I understand that consul can attend to all the duties that need to be attended to at that place.

I regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] failed to notice one of the most material points involved in this discussion. My other distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT], when he yesterday suggested a defense of the administration with regard to the proposed consul-general at Apia, said that the $1,138 paid to him while awaiting instructions was paid to him for a different purpose; that the law allowed him a salary for traveling so many thousand miles, and that the $1,138 was for traveling.

I call attention to this expenditure because an answer to the one case is an answer to both. Here, likewise, is an expenditure of $1,657.62 while awaiting instructions. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois let me say that by turning to the statutes he will observe that the Secretary of State is authorized to allow a salary to the consul-general to Apia for seventy days while traveling and for thirty days while awaiting instructions, and nothing more.

I have not looked to see how many days it takes to travel to Cairo; I presume it does not take seventy. Now if you will consider what this man is entitled to under the law and under the instructions of the Secretary of State you will see with what profligacy or carelessness the money of the Government is handled. Here is over $1,600 paid to this man when there was no possible legal right to justify the payment of one-half or even one-third of that amount.

I have called upon the Department and upon friends of the Department to give me information, to answer these questions in a plain, business-like way. Business is business. If the Department has paid $1,600 for nothing to a man not entitled to it, why should not the Department say so? Why should it not admit that it is careless in the management of business, and that it needs the strong arm of this Congress to hold it in the line of duty? I want these gentlemen to answer these questions: Is it true, or is it not true, that seventy days are allowed to Apia? Is it true, or is it not true, that less than seventy days are allowed to Cairo? Is it true, or is it not true, that twice the money the law allows has been paid to each one of these consuls-general?

Now will you maintain a consul-general who is thus stained with the taking of illegal fees, with the taking of illegal salary, with the squandering of the public money, who has done nothing so far as we can see but entertain Americans traveling abroad?

Mr. Chairman, I shall not grieve if this House sees proper to send this man back with this salary of $5,000, aggregating with expenses, &c., $11,413. I shall not complain of such action; but I ask members of this committee to prepare themselves to give some sensible reason to the honest, plodding, thoughtful business men of this country who expend their means fairly and honestly, who pay their debts, who pay nothing but what is right and proper, and who expect us to pay nothing but what is right and what is sanctioned by the law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I have heard some gentleman inquire what are the duties of the consul-general at Cairo. I have before me the Revised Statutes, and I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to this provision:

SEC. 4083. To carry into full effect the provisions of the treaties of the United States with China, Japan, Siam, Egypt, and Madagascar, respectively, the minister and the consuls of the United States, duly appointed to reside in each of those countries, shall, in addition to other powers and duties imposed upon them, respectively, by the provisions of such treaties, respectively, be invested with the judicial authority herein described which shall appertain to the office of minister and consul, and be a part of the duties belonging thereto, wherein and so far as the same is allowed by treaty.

SEC. 4084. The officers mentioned in the preceding section are fully empowered to arraign and try, in the manner herein provided, all citizens of the United States charged with offenses against law committed in such countries, respectively, and to sentence such offenders in the manner herein authorized; and each of them is authorized to issue all such processes as are suitable and necessary to carry this authority into execution.

I read further:

SEC. 4085. Such officers are also invested with all the judicial authority necessary to execute the provisions of such treaties, respectively, in regard to civil rights, whether of property or person; and they shall entertain jurisdiction in matters of contract, at the port where, or nearest to which, the contract was made, or at the port at which, or nearest to which, it was to be executed, and in all other matters, at the port where, or nearest to which, the cause of controversy arose, or at the port where, or nearest to which, the damage complained of was sustained, provided such port be one of the ports at which the United States are represented by consuls. Such jurisdiction shall embrace all controversies between citizens of the United States, or others, provided for by such treaties, respectively.

These duties are a part of the jurisdiction of these officers, so that unless these positions are maintained citizens of the United States whose rights are in question in these countries must be turned over to the tender mercies of the judges of the local courts of the respective countries. By treaty stipulations we have retained jurisdiction of questions affecting the rights of our own citizens; and it is proper we should provide for the settlement of such controversies. I will add that a man performing these duties must be learned in the law, must be a man of considerable ability.

Mr. HITT. I will state as a practical fact that the provisions of this treaty and many similar treaties have by agreement been extended to civil cases involving the rights of American citizens which may come before the mixed courts, where American judges sit beside Italian, Austrian, English, and French judges named by the respective governments which are participants in the mixed tribunals and paid for and supported by the Egyptian Government. The criminal jurisdiction of our consul-general and diplomatic agent remains unimpaired. He is the man to whom Americans in that country must look for the protection of their personal rights.

Inquiry having been raised by my friend from Missouri in regard to Apia, I desire to say (though it may not be germane to the amendment) that the $1,100 which appeared as drawn by the officer while "awaiting instructions" was an erroneous entry in description, and was money paid to him for thirty days during which he drew salary while receiving instruction, and also the transit period allowed by law, seventy days, the two periods making over a quarter of a year, and the whole sum increased by the difference of exchange between this country and Apia. That as to the charge in regard to the officer in Egypt, the circumstances are so similar that——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the consuls-general at Melbourne, Berlin, Panama, and Kanagawa, at $4,000 each, $16,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 103 strike out the word "Melbourne;" and strike out the word "sixteen," in lines 104 and 105, and insert the word "twelve;" and after the word "dollars," in line 105, insert the words "for the salary of the consul-general at Melbourne, forty-five hundred dollars."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to talk about this amendment. I am ready for a vote.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the consuls-general at Frankfort, Montreal, Vienna, and Bucharest, at $3,000 each, $12,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "Montreal," in lines 106 and 107, and the word "twelve" in line 108, insert in lieu thereof the word "nine;" and insert after the word "dollars," in line 108, the words "for the salary of consul-general at Montreal, $4,000."

Mr. CANNON. The object of that amendment is to leave the salary as it now is under the law. I do not propose to discuss it.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the consuls-general at Saint Petersburg, Constantinople, Halifax, Mexico, and Rome, at $2,000 each, $10,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Constantinople," "Halifax," and "Rome," in line 110, and the word "ten," in line 111, and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and after the word "dollars," in line 111, insert the following: "For the salaries of the consuls-general at Constantinople, Halifax, and Rome, at $3,500 each, $10,500."

Mr. CANNON. The object of the amendment is to enable these consuls to receive the salaries they now receive under the law. And that is all I desire to say.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of the consul at Hong-Kong (Great Britain), $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word dollars, in line 115, insert the words "for the salary of consul at Honolulu, $4,000.

Mr. CANNON. The object of the amendment is to provide for the salary of the consul-general at Honolulu. There has been one there for several years, and the bill makes no appropriation for it; that is all.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of consuls at Canton, in China, and Amoy, in China, at $3,500 each, $7,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "in China," in line 118, and insert the words "Foochow," "Hankow," "Tien-Tsin," "Chin-Kiang," "Ningpo;" and after the word "China," in line 119, insert the words "Callao, Peru," and strike out the word "seven," in line 119, and insert "twenty-eight."

Mr. CANNON. The object of the amendment is to maintain the salaries of the consuls named as they are now by law, and have been for thirty years.

I wish to say a single word about Callao. It is put down at $2,500 in this bill. It is $3,500 under the present law, at which figure I propose it shall be continued. It is an important consulate, and the consul who fills it, in view of his health, must live some distance back in the country. It is a yellow-fever post. A former member of this House, my predecessor, a brigadier-general in the Union Army, Joshua H. Moore, was appointed about eighteen months ago as consul to Callao. He went down there, and while performing his duties was attacked by and died of yellow fever.

The duties of this place are important, and you cannot get a proper American representative for less than $3,500 a year. That is all I desire to say.

Somebody asks, is it a naval station. Oh, yes; it is a naval station.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Class IV: At $2,500 per annum:

For salaries of consuls at Callao, Peru; Antwerp, Belgium; Singapore, Great Britain; Tunstall, Great Britain; Birmingham, Great Britain; Sheffield, Great Britain; Dundee, Great Britain; Leith, Great Britain; Nottingham, Great Britain; Athens, Greece; Marseilles, France; Bordeaux, France; Lyons, France; Cienfuegos, Spanish dominions; Smyrna, Turkish dominions; Hamburg, Germany; Bremen, Germany, and Dresden, Germany, at $2,500 each, $45,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Cienfuegos" insert the words "Santiago de Cuba," and after the word "Germany," in line 141, insert the words "St. Thomas, Danish dominions."

Mr. CANNON. The object of the amendment is to leave the salaries as they are.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I move, in line 138, before the word "Athens," to insert "Victoria, British Columbia;" and in line 142, strike out "$45,000" and insert "$47,500."

Mr. RANDALL. That will be a saving to the Government.

Mr. BURNES. I agree to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Class V.—At $2,000 per annum:

For salaries of consuls at Dublin, Great Britain; Leeds, Great Britain; Toronto, Great Britain; Saint John, Great Britain (New Brunswick); Kingston, Great Britain (Jamaica); Nassau, Great Britain (New Providence); Cardiff, Great Britain (South Wales); Sydney, Great Britain (New South Wales); Santiago de Cuba, Spanish dominions; Sagua la Grande, Spanish dominions (Cuba); San Juan, Spanish dominions (Porto Rico); Rotterdam, Netherlands; Sonneberg, Germany; Nuremberg, Germany; Barmen, Germany; Cologne, Germany; Chemnitz, Germany; Leipsic, Germany; Crefeld, Germany; Trieste, Austria-Hungary; Prague, Austria-Hungary; Palermo, Italy; Basle, Switzerland; Zurich, Switzerland; Acapulco, Mexico; Matamoras, Mexico; Pernambuco, Brazil; Maracaibo, Venezuela; Montevideo, Uruguay; La Paz, Bolivia; Saint Thomas, Danish dominions (West India Islands); and Cairo, Turkish dominions, at $2,000 each, $64,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "at," in line 144, insert "Port Louis, Tangier, Tamatave, Odessa, Cork, Hamilton, Beirut."

Mr. CANNON. The object of the amendment is the same as before.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I move at the end of line 146 to add Coaticook, Canada.

I simply desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment that the town of Coaticook, Canada, is located near the boundary line of Vermont and New Hampshire, being only about ten miles distant, as I understand. It is quite a large town, a place of considerable commercial importance, where an extensive business embracing various kinds of trade is carried on, in which the people on both sides of the ine are more or less interested. A consulate has been established there or upward of twenty years, located on the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, over which the larger proportion of freight from Canada destined for New England comes into the United States. It is a place at which the custom-house for that section of the Dominion of Canada has long been established. For several years our consul at that point has been paid an annual salary of $2,000. There is no appropriation in this bill for the consul at Coaticook; therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have moved the amendment appropriating $2,000 therefor for the next fiscal year.

My judgment, formed from a long acquaintance with that section of the province, is that a consulate is needed at Coaticook as much or more than at Sherbrooke. The International Railway, so called, I believe, forms a junction with the Grand Trunk Railway at Lennoxville, a town lying between Sherbrooke and Coaticook, and that region of country known as the eastern townships of Canada is a section with which the people of Vermont and New Hampshire have an extensive commercial intercourse. In view of the amount of traffic over the Grand Trunk Railway passing through Coaticook, and the further fact that there is quite a large population east of Sherbrooke, which will be more conveniently accommodated in the transation of business at the Coaticook consulate, it will be unwise to abolish the office at Coaticook. It is true perhaps that the Sherbrooke and Coaticook offices might be consolidated into one, but some officer of the United States, a consul or a consular or commercial agent, is required at Coaticook quite or nearly as much as at Sherbrooke.

The district which centers at Coaticook was divided when the commercial agent was recently appointed at Sherbrook and the larger section assigned to him by the State Department; hence the revenues formerly accounted for from Coaticook, amounting to several thousand dollars yearly, have been very largely collected at the Sherbrook office, at which point the agent is now paid by fees. It seems to me, sir, in view of the situation, this bill ought to contain the usual appropriation for the consulate at Coaticook.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire be kind enough to inform the House what is the distance from Sherbrook to Coaticook?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Between twenty-five and thirty miles, I think. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the important town of Lennoxville, where the International Railway of Canada connects with the Grand Trunk, is between Coaticook and Sherbrooke, also Compton; and my own impression is the people of those places, and those dealing with them, having business to transact with the United States consul will be more conveniently and better accommodated at Coaticook than elsewhere.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to ask him whether this bill intends to abolish the consulate at Coaticook?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. It is not provided for in the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, from the information which I have I think that there ought to be no consulate at Coaticook. The business is better done and very properly done by the consular office at Sherbrooke. The amount done now at Coatjcook and during the last several years is insignificant. Sherbrooke is quite an important point. Its earnings have been largely in excess of the fees paid by the Government for conducting the consular business at that point. Sherbrooke is a profitable office. The other is largely unprofitable. There is but a short distance between them, and the business would scarcely warrant the keeping up of two offices. I am under the impression, from all the information I have received upon the subject, that no better can be done in this particular case than the consolidation of these two offices and allowing all to be done at the Sherbrooke office.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to say, in view of what has been stated by fair-minded, intelligent gentlemen on this side of the House—gentlemen like my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]—that had they examined the bill as carefully as I have examined it there would have been far less difference of opinion between us with reference to the recommendations which the committee have seen proper to make. In view of what the gentleman from Indiana has already said, it is almost unnecessary to speak upon this amendment to show that this consulate at Coaticook ought to be dropped.

The earnings, Mr. Chairman, at that office are shown to be but little; the business is very small; while at Sherbrooke, where there is a feed consul, the business is more profitable and properly done.

I ought to call attention to the fact, however, that our consul at Coaticook is deserving perhaps of a better fate at the hands of my Republican friends in this House, because of all the gentlemen who have made speeches upon the tariff question I think his consular report is the most thorough, so far as length, breadth, and size is concerned, upon the tariff question that I have seen. He seems to have had ample time for the consideration of political questions and no other duties to perform. His reports came in with some degree of regularity, and his business seems to have been nothing, comparatively at least. But, finally, sir, I have to become again the champion of the Secretary of State, because although he did not do it at first, I presume that the venerable and distinguished Secretary, when he saw that the committee was earnestly at work on this business and carefully at work upon it, reviewed his recommendations upon which the estimates were made in a subsequent report, and he himself suggested the abolition of this consulate at Coaticook.

With this action on the part of the Secretary and the advice of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], I think it is unnecessary that more should be said.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say just a word. I did not move to insert "Coaticook," the Chair will recollect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] offered the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe it ought to be inserted, and the Secretary of State has substantially said so, and the consul himself has said so. My friend from Missouri seems to intimate the probabilities are that this consul and the Secretary heard he was coming with his shears, and therefore, like Crockett's coon, they came down. Perhaps that may be true. But I am a member of the committee with the gentleman from Missouri. This report was made in Executive Document 121 on the 20th of last March. And some time prior to that the consul at Coaticook transmitted his communication.

Now, the consul away up at Coaticook might have known my friend was after him. But I pledge my friend my word I did not know he was going for Coaticook until about a week ago, when he introduced the bill; and I doubt if even the Secretary of State was psychologist enough to know my friend was going for Coaticook. But he did, and the Secretary of State, anticipating he would go for it, on the 20th of March said substantially it should be gone for, and so did the consul prior to that time.

Mr. BURNES. I beg to add I was always imprudent and thoughtless in suggesting matters that might be prejudicial to myself. I did not know, but I might have known, the moment I suggested to my colleague from Illinois the attitude this gentleman maintained on the great question disposed of the other day that my friend would come to his defense. He comes now to the defense of Coaticook since he learns that this gentleman has been writing able articles on the subject of the protective tariff.

Mr. CANNON. I merely want to say further that possibly it may be true that my friend from Missouri has given voice now to his feeling about the consulates of this country when he censures the consul at Coaticook. But when the consul at Coaticook and all these other consuls about the world perform the duty incumbent upon them under the law to report the facts as to the trade and commerce of the countries where they represent this Government, and when those facts militate against the revenue notions of the gentleman from Kentucky or of the majority on that side, that is no good reason for dismissing a consul from office or abolishing the consulate.

I did not know, and would not have intimated before, that my friend was thinking about the question from that standpoint. But possibly that may be an explanation of the animus of the gentlemen on the other side in going for these consuls; because forsooth the facts there reported may militate against the revenue notions which many of the gentlemen entertain on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, and Mr. HUNT took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 862) for the relief of Uriel Crocker; and

A bill (S. 1885) for the erection of a public building at Wilmington, Del.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Class VI: At $1,500 per annum:

Cork, Great Britain; Newcastle, Great Britain; Auckland, Great Britain; Cape Town, Great Britain (Africa); Charlottetown, Great Britain (Prince Edward Island); Kingston, Great Britain; Prescott, Great Britain; Port Sarnia, Great Britain; Saint John, Great Britain (Canada); Hamilton, Great Britain (Canada); Barbados, Great Britain; Bermuda, Great Britain; Fort Erie, Great Britain; Amherstburg, Great Britain (Canada West); Windsor, Great Britain (Canada West); Winnipeg, Great Britain; Odessa, Russia; Tamatave, Madagascar; Beirut, Turkish dominions; Tampico, Mexico; El Paso del Norte, Mexico; Martinique, French dominions; Guadeloupe, French dominions; Cadiz, Spanish dominions; Malga, Spanish dominions; Verviers and Liege, Belgium; Geneva, Switzerland; Munich, Germany; Stuttgart, Germany; Mannheim, Germany; Aix la Chapelle, Germany; Amsterdam, Netherlands; Genoa, Italy; Naples, Italy; Milan, Italy; Leghorn, Italy; Florence, Italy; Messina, Italy; Laguayra, Venezuela; Puerto Cabello, Venezuela; Bahia, Brazil; Para, Brazil; Manila, Philippine Islands; San Domingo, San Domingo; Guayaquil, Ecuador; Tegucigalpa, Honduras; Santiago de Guatemala, Guatemala; San José, Costa Rico; Managua, Nicaragua; San Salvador, Salvador; Asuncion, Paraguay; and Quebec, Great Britain, at $1,500 each, $78,000.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 169, after the word "Britain," insert "Clifton, Great Britain."
And in line 187 strike out "$78,000" and insert "$79,500."

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not suppose the gentleman in charge of the bill will oppose that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of this amendment is to transfer this consulate from class 7, at $1,000, to class 6, at $1,500.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir; it merely changes the class.

Mr. BURNES. I find that Clifton was omitted from the list in class 6 in consequence of a principle adopted by the committee, that where an officer had proved himself derelict or not prompt and faithful in the discharge of his duties some notice should be taken of it in a way he should remember. We were under an apprehension that this consul had not made his report. Upon further information it seems that the absence of his report arose through an error in the office of the Department at the time of the printing of the reports, and that this consul was not censurable as we supposed. I feel authorized, therefore, following the principle recognized in the matter, to accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of the amendment is to add $1,500 to the total of this paragraph and to reduce the total of the next paragraph $1,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. The total of this paragraph will be $79,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 163, after the words "Great Britain," the words "Mahé, Seychelles, Malta, Great Britain, Copenhagen, Denmark."

Mr. HITT. That amendment will make this bill comply in its terms with the provisions of the present law. I have no further remark to make.

Mr. BURNES. I would suggest to my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that Copenhagen has already been provided for by authorizing the appointment of a minister resident and consul-general there. I presume he does not want a consul there in addition to a consul-general.

Mr. HITT. I do not agree with my friend in the policy of making the minister resident there also a consul-general. I believe he should be wholly a diplomatic officer and that the consul should be a different individual. What I would prefer, and the amendment I offer is a movement in that direction, is to establish a consul there.

Mr. BURNES. This is another instance in which I agree with the Secretary of State, and the gentleman from Illinois differs from the Secretary of State.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. HITT, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend the paragraph by inserting after the words "Great Britain," in line 171, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the words "Great Britain," in line 171, insert the following words: "Bristol, Gibraltar, St. Helena, Port Stanley, Clifton, Pictou, Goderich, Southampton, Ceylon, Antigua, Saint Stephen's, Great Britain, Nice, French dominions, Barcelona, Spanish dominions, Fayal, Funchal, Portuguese dominions, Jerusalem, Turkish dominions, Mahé, Malta, Copenhagen."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

SCHEDULE C.

Class VII: At $1,000 per annum:

For salaries of consuls at Bristol, Great Britain; Gibraltar, Great Britain; St. Helena, Great Britain; Port Stanley, Great Britain (Fiji Islands); Clifton, Great Britain; Pictou, Great Britain (Nova Scotia); Goderich, Great Britain (Canada West); Southampton, Great Britain; Ceylon, Great Britain; Antigua, Great Britain; St. Stephen's, Great Britain; Nice, French dominions; Barcelona, Spanish dominions; Fayal, Portuguese dominions (Azores); Funchal, Portuguese dominions; Jerusalem, Turkish dominions; Windsor, Great Britain (Nova Scotia); Bombay, Great Britain (India); Sierro Leone, Great Britain (Africa); Turk's Island, Great Britain; Nantes, French dominions; Algiers, French dominions; Venice, Italy; Cape Haytien; Batavia, Netherlands; Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil; Ruatan and Truxillo, Honduras, to reside at Utila; Guaymas, Mexico; Nuevo Laredo, Mexico; Piedras Negras, Mexico; Zanzibar, Muscat; Santiago, Portuguese dominions (Cape Verde Islands); Tahiti, French dominions (Society Islands, Pacific Ocean); Talcahuano, Chili; and Ghent, Belgium, at $1,000 each, $35,000.

Mr. BURNES. In order to make this paragraph correspond with the amendment adopted in the preceding paragraph, I move to strike out the words "Clifton, Great Britain," in line 192, and also to reduce the total named at the end of the paragraph from $35,000 to $34,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I move to insert what I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in after the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For consular officers not citizens of the United States filling vacancies or replacing officers absent by authority of the State Department, $10,000.

Mr. HITT. That is an appropriation specially made each year and has for many years been made by Congress for the compensation of those persons, usually vice-consuls of the United States, whom consuls and other officers of the United States are compelled to employ, or whom the Department appoints to serve while consuls are absent, or temporarily to take the places of those who have died.

Under our law an ordinary consular officer cannot receive any pay without taking the oath of allegiance. That prohibits all foreigners from receiving any pay for services rendered as consuls. Unless this special appropriation is made these vice-consuls who are necessarily employed at many places throughout the world where there are no resident Americans, and where the compensation is so low that no American can be induced to go there, can not be paid. With this appropriation they can be paid; otherwise there will be no means to pay these officers for services they may render.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HITT, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman from Missouri in charge of this bill [Mr. BURNES] to consent that the paragraphs included between lines 223 and 254 may be read together, so that I can offer as a substitute for them the provision contained in the appropriation bill for the current year.

Mr. BURNES. I have no objection to that.

The Clerk accordingly read as follows:

For payment of salaries to clerks at consulates-general, when actually employed, the following sums are severally appropriated:

For clerks to consulates-general at London, Paris, and Havana, at $2,000 each; at Honolulu, Shanghai, and Calcutta, at $1,000 each; at Rio de Janeiro and Berlin, at $1,200 each; at Panama, Kanagawa, and Montreal, at $800 each; at Vienna and Frankfort, at $600 each; in all, $15,000.

For payment of salaries to clerks at consulates, when actually employed, the following sums are severally appropriated:

For clerks to consulates at Liverpool, $1,500; Hong-Kong, $1,000; Chemnitz and Manchester, at $800 each; Prague, Bradford, and Glasgow, at $700 each; Belfast, Lyons, Palermo, Tunstall, and Nottingham, at $600 each; Bordeaux, Crefeld, Sonneberg, Barmen, Birmingham, Dundee, Hamburg, and Leipsic, at $500 each; Antwerp, Bremen, Colon, Havre, Nuremberg, Sheffield, and Zurich, at $400 each; in all, $16,000.

For salaries to clerks, in the discretion of the Secretary of State, at consulates or consulates-general not hereinbefore named or provided for in respect to clerical assistants, $6,000: Provided, That no greater portion of said sum than $400 shall be allowed or paid to a clerk or clerks at any one consulate or consulate-general: Provided further, That the total sum expended for the fiscal year shall not exceed the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. I offer as a substitute for the paragraphs just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For allowance for clerks at consulates, $66,500, as follows:

For the consul at Liverpool, a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,500 for any one year; and for the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, Shanghai, and Rio de Janeiro, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; for the consuls-general at Berlin, Frankfort, Vienna, and Kanagawa, and for the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, Crefeld, and Chemnitz, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,500 for any one year; for the consul-general at Montreal, and the consuls at Bradford and Birmingham, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,200 for any one year; for the consuls-general at Calcutta, Port au Prince, Hayti, and Melbourne, and for the consuls at Leipsic, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Marseilles, Nuremberg, Tunstall, Antwerp, Bordeaux, Colon (Aspinwall), Glasgow, and Singapore, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,000 for any one year; for the consuls at Belfast, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, Matamoras, and for consul-general at Halifax, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $800 for any one year; for the consul-general at Mexico and for the consuls at Beirut, Naples, Genoa, Stuttgart, Florence, Mannheim, Prague, Zurich, Panama, and Demarara, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $600 for any one year.

For an additional allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk-hire, no greater portion of this sum than $400 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year, $6,000: Provided, That the total sum expended in any one year shall not exceed the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say but a word or two. The Committee of the Whole will notice that by this bill the salaries of consuls are reduced all along the line. The bill also proposes to appropriate only $37,000 for clerk-hire at consulates, whereas the bill of last year appropriates $66,500, or a sum $29,500 more than is proposed to be appropriated by this bill for that purpose. In other words, we propose to burn the candle at both ends, or to cut off the head and cut off the feet, to cut both ways; to decrease the salaries of consuls and also to decrease the clerk-hire at the different consulates.

Now I do not know what this Committee of the Whole may do, though I have a strong suspicion as to what they will do. I do not believe they ought to make this proposed reduction in the appropriation for clerk-hire; I feel confident that they ought not to.

I undertake to say on my own responsibility—and I feel warranted in saying it—that as to this appropriation bill the other side of the House intends to pass it upon the expectation that the Senate will correct it.

Mr. RANDALL. As one member on this side I want to correct the gentleman on that point.

Mr. CANNON. Why, sir, it has happened before in this House and in this Committee of the Whole during this session—and I can show it by the RECORD—that when it has been proposed to concur in Senate amendments to appropriation bills gentlemen have said publicly and privately, "No, do not do that; non-concur and give us something to trade off." I am warranted in saying that these bills are largely made up from that standpoint. Now, that may be a good way to legislate; but I do not think it is.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I wish only to say that the effect of this amendment would be to increase the amount of the appropriation nearly $30,000.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was singularly mistaken with regard to the amount allowed for clerk-hire. It is about $14,000 more than the gentleman is aware of.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by inserting after the word "Sheffield," in line 244, the word "Genoa," and after the word "thousand," in line 245, the words "four hundred."

The object of this amendment is to maintain a clerk to the consul at Genoa at the rate of $400 per annum.

The Secretary of State in his report recommends that the consul at Genoa shall have his salary increased from $1,500 to $2,000. This recommendation was unsolicited by the consul or any friend of his, having been suggested solely by a knowledge of the duties of that office. But I made no motion to increase the salary of this consul when we were upon that paragraph. The Secretary of State recommends that this officer be allowed $600 per annum for a clerk, the same allowance now made, and which has been paid for several years. In preparing this bill the committee have overlooked or disregarded the recommendation of the Secretary of State with regard to an increase of this consul's salary, and have made no provision whatever for a clerkship, leaving this consul simply his salary of $1,500. Yesterday I telegraphed to the Secretary of State to ascertain whether the business transacted by the consul at Genoa corresponded this year with that for the year ending June 30, 1883, when the fees were $1,669. I received in response the following dispatch:

The returns from Genoa so far received show an increase of exports to the United States of nearly 100 per cent. over those of 1883.

FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I urge upon the committee that this amendment of mine be adopted. I have not asked $600, only $400. This consul, whom I personally know, went over there with several members of his family. He is an economical man, as I can testify, for I know that during four years, from 1861 to 1865, he lived on $13 a month. Since representing this Government at Genoa he has been obliged to draw upon his home resources in order to patch out his official allowance. He is required to give much attention to visitors as well as to the regular discharge of his official duties. I therefore appeal to the courtesy of the Committee on Appropriations and to gentlemen on both sides to assent to this amendment.

Mr. BURNES. It is almost impossible for any one to determine as to the necessity for a clerkship at any particular consulate, unless upon some special information. Therefore, wherever we have had information of the character now given by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] we have allowed a clerk. As the gentleman from Iowa bears testimony from his personal knowledge that this consul needs a clerk, I am, so far as I am concerned, perfectly willing to assent to the amendment, particularly as I understand this consul was a brave soldier for four years.

The amendment of Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of consular clerks who may be appointed by the President in pursuance of sections 1704 and 1705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $14,000.

Mr. HITT. I move, in line 259, to strike out the words "who may be," as those words create ambiguity and may lead to confusion on the part of the accounting officer. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will consent to that amendment being adopted.

Mr. BURNES. The amendment is a proper one, and I am willing it shall be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of three interpreters of the Chinese language, to be assigned to such consulates as the President may direct from time to time, each one to receive $1,500, and no more, $4,500: Provided, That no person otherwise receiving a salary, in any capacity whatever, from the United States shall be entitled to any part of the above sum.

For salary of interpreter to the legation and consulate-general at Bangkok, $500.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out what has been read by the Clerk and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of the interpreters to the following consulates: at Shanghai, Tien-Tsin, Foochow, and Kanagawa, at $2,000 each, $8,000.

For salaries of the interpreters to the consulates at Hankow, Amoy, Canton, and Hong-Kong, at $750 each, $3,000.

For salaries of the interpreters to other consulates in China, Japan, and Siam, $5,000.

For interpreters, guards, and other expenses, at the consulates at Constantinople, Smyrna, Cairo, Jerusalem, and Beirut, in the Turkish dominions, $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. The present amount of salaries of interpreters to consulates carried by this bill is $5,000. The amount provided in the law this year, being the same amount provided for former years, is $19,000. This bill then shows a decrease of $14,000. From all the information I can get, if we are to utilize our consuls in Oriental countries it is necessary to have interpreters, as proposed under my amendment, which, as I have said, is the same as existing law.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of six marshals of consular courts, at $1,000 each, as follows: One for all such courts in Japan, one for all such courts in the Turkish dominions, and four for all such courts in China, including Hong-Kong, $6,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the words "including Hong-Kong." I ask my friend from Missouri to accept it. Hong-Kong is not a Chinese city but an English city, and there is no consular court there to which to send a marshal.

Mr. CANNON. I am surprised my friend from Illinois should make such a statement here, that Hong-Kong is an English city. True, we are so informed. When we come to speak of great political divisions the people of the United States are nearly all of them of the belief that Hong-Kong is in China. I can not prove it is not, but this bill says it is not, that it is in Great Britain. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman's wit is not as admirable as the skill with which he has managed the opposition to this bill. As to the geography of Hong-Kong, though geographically in China, it is nevertheless an English city, and under the dominion of Great Britain. I had supposed the gentleman would not feel that we were giving him any information when we included Hong-Kong as a part of China geographically.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the expense of providing all such stationery, blanks, record, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and commercial agencies in the transaction of their business, $34,000.

For the payment of the actual expenses of office-rent for such consulates-general, consulates, and commercial agencies as the President shall deem entitled thereto, under section 1706 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, $50,000: Provided, That such office-rent shall in no case exceed 20 per cent. of the salary of the consulate-general, consulate, or commercial agency for which it is rented.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out what has been read by the Clerk, and in lieu thereof to insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of United States consulates, such as stationery, bookcases, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, rent, freight, postage, and other necessary miscellaneous matters, $110,000.

Mr. CANNON. We have come to a point in this bill where I believe as one member of the committee at least it is of absolute necessity and importance there should be some amendment. The provision in the bill is peculiar. It proposes to create a contingent fund which can be used only for the purpose intended, whereas the amendment I have offered creates a contingent fund covering all contingencies within the discretion of the Secretary of State. It is the same provision which has stood in the law for twenty-five years.

Let us see the effect of the change the gentleman proposes to make, and I hope I may have the attention of the committee for a moment. Under the bill as it is you could not pay for any postage. Last year the postage of consuls in correspondence with the State Department amounted to $26,445.

You can not, under the proposed appropriation, pay any thing for telegrams from these officers to the Secretary of State. Last year there was expended for this purpose $2,224. You make no appropriation or provision for office furniture and such necessary expenses. Last year this item amounted to $6,500. You can not pay any thing for carrying out the provision of the Revised Statutes, which requires that statistics shall be gathered by our consuls and reported to the Government. The importance of these consular reports is being fully recognized. Last year this service cost $6,197. Under this bill you can not pay freight upon supplies, either foreign or domestic, back and forth from the Secretary of State's office, which last year cost in round numbers $4,000. You can not, under this proposed appropriation, pay one cent for certifying or ascertaining the values of invoices of merchandise that are imported into this country, when it is the duty, under the law, for the consuls to certify invoices, to see that no undervaluation takes place. It is their duty to certify invoices of goods that are imported here which yield revenue to the Government running up in the hundreds of millions. You do not give them the power to perform the duty that is required of them to ascertain the value of these invoices. You do not give them a contingent fund by which they can call in the services of an expert if they find it necessary before certifying. There are several other items of the same kind to which I might call attention.

Now, I say if that is the sense of this committee and of this House, to so cripple this service as to render it inoperative and of no effect or value to the country, and make it possible to plunder the Government and the public revenues; if it is the sense of the committee to make it impossible for these officials to communicate with the Secretary of State, and you give them nothing for postage or telegrams upon official business—I say if you propose to do such things I want you to do it after you have given the subject careful attention. I want you to do it deliberately; and I ask my friend from Missouri, understanding that and knowing these facts as I have stated them to be, and as I am satisfied they are, I ask him in the interest of good government, in the interest of economy and the public service, to allow this amendment to prevail, so that these objects may be provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Chair decided that by the sound the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I call for a division. We had just as well have tellers at once.

Mr. BURNES. Before answering that call, if I can have unanimous consent for a few moments, I think I understand the motive of the gentleman from Illinois, and possibly I may be able to give him that satisfaction he desires. I do not mean anything hostile in that of course. [Laughter.]

In the preparation of this item of the bill the committee has followed the law and appropriated for the different items authorized by the statute. But the committee has not made an appropriation for many other items that have grown up in this service by the practice of the Department. This House has now to pass upon the question whether it will recognize in future appropriations the items of expenditures that the Department now recognizes.

The gentleman from Illinois desires that you shall pass upon this question. I think the better plan would be, as I have suggested to him, to submit the direct question to the House whether you will, after appropriating for all of the items named in the statute, then agree to extend that appropriation still further by incorporating an item for the postage. The postage has not been allowed for reasons that I gave on yesterday. It has been allowed to unsalaried consuls, but is not allowed, as far as I can see, to consuls, consuls-general, and ministers. Now, I find the law in that condition. What, then, are we to do? I ask, if you wish to appropriate for postage, to let us do it plainly and frankly, and not under a misuse of language and under an interpolation of the statute law of the country. Let us do it fairly. I do not care whether you appropriate a few dollars more or less. I am not seeking any glory so far as reducing appropriations is concerned in this bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURNES. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman please state what items of expense not authorized by law have in fact grown up under the practice of the Department to which he objects.

Mr. BURNES. I suppose I may say that there are twenty-five reported to me by the Secretary of State. For instance, boat-hire in the Orient, advertising, messengers to consulates, publishing death-notices, miscellaneous, Chinese waiters, moving consulates, newspapers and prices-current, domestic and foreign freights, and various other items of that character. Now, I say, and that is all I have to say, that this bill covers every item embraced in or authorized by the statute.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who in the last Congress was my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, that we ought not to find too much fault with the other side of the House for its action. We are responsible for it. We reduced the appropriations down to as low a point as it was permissible to reduce them to and yet support the Government. But it is absolutely necessary that this Congress should reduce them below that point for the purpose of making political capital.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. HISCOCK. We had no business to make appropriations and give to the Government just what it ought to have.

Mr. RANDALL. We can discuss the subject to which the gentleman is alluding when we come to have before us the deficiency bill which has been necessitated by the action of the Committee on Appropriations of the last Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am willing to compare deficiency bills with him, taking the one we were compelled to pass at the commencement of the Forty-seventh Congress. There has been a great deal said about our making meager appropriations, and especially on the Post-Office bill. When we made our appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department a law was subsequently passed that increased the amount necessary. I have heard a great deal of talk on that subject. But here is a bill which reduces the appropriation in the Forty-sixth Congress about $250,000 or $300,000.

Mr. RANDALL. We have given it further examination.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says they have given it further examination. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had presided over the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee in the Forty-sixth Congress, after having had his example before it and inspired by his spirit of economy, fixed the appropriations at the lowest possible amount. And this bill goes $230,000 or $240,000 below that. And as I have said, we are to blame for it.

Mr. RANDALL. Permit me to say that in my experience during a series of years I have never known a consular and diplomatic bill that was so thoroughly studied out by any gentleman in charge of it as this has been by the gentleman in charge of this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. It has been studied out in just this way: The Committee on Appropriations has gone back to the old statutes that were passed years ago regulating this service, and has attempted to make the appropriations in this bill correspond to those of previous years and to those of old acts, without making any sort of allowance for the growth of our country and for the growth of our commerce. They have attempted to reduce the amount to be expended for this branch of the Government down to the point necessary before the war. That has been the theory, and the gentleman from Missouri has been extremely industrious. I commend him for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CANNON was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Missouri has been extremely industrious, and yet I am frank to say, looking that distinguished gentleman squarely in the face, he is the last man on the Democratic side I would have thought capable of perpetrating such a bill. There are men on that side I would have expected it from. But I must say in all frankness I did not believe he could do it. And again I say to my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if the Government is starved for the next fiscal year I do not suppose any two men are more responsible for it than he and I, because we did not give more than was required to enable our Democratic friends to show to the country that they had reported an appropriation bill which reduces the amount that had been given in the preceding year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] insist on his request for tellers?

Mr. CANNON. I do. I should be glad, however, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will offer an amendment to my amendment or suggest one that will appropriate specifically for postage, telegrams, and such other necessary matters as are not appropriated for in this bill. They are covered by my general amendment; but if the gentleman wants to make it specific I will co-operate with him to that end.

Mr. BURNES. I regret exceedingly I have been unable to give satisfaction to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and I regret now and feel compelled to say that I regret I can not yield to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], since every item of expense authorized by the statute law of this country has been justly, fairly, and fully appropriated for in and by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. CANNON. In fairness to myself and to the gentleman from Missouri, I desire to say, touching that point he has just referred to, if you go back to the statute law of 1856, and nowhere else—if you include nothing since that time—the gentleman is correct. But if you go to every appropriation bill that has been passed since 1856, up to and including the bill for the present year, he is incorrect. For the general contingent expenses covered by my amendment have been provided for year by year. And upon that point I apprehend the gentleman is not justified nor is his party in seeking to go back after they have given us an example for long years when they were in power in making the appropriation as I propose to make it. I apprehend they are estopped from so doing. If the facts do not estop them, their own action here for the six years they had power in this House does estop them. And I take it to be the part of statesmanship and wise legislation to recognize that there is an ocean cable, and to recognize the progress of science and of invention, and to adapt ourselves as we have been adapting ourselves in these appropriation bills, to the changed condition of affairs for a quarter of a century.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in requesting the tellers to take their places thought there had been a vote in favor of tellers. It appears no such vote was had.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for another division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 63.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 37, noes 64.

Mr. CANNON (one of the tellers). No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will under the rule direct the roll to be called.

Mr. BURNES. I am not willing to be a party to any dilatory proceedings, and believing that we can best dispatch business by rising, I move that the committee now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Before putting that motion the Chair wishes to state in regard to his ruling upon the point of order first made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], this evening, that he is in doubt whether it is correct. He had no time for examination, and does not propose to make any decision or other suggestion at this time, except simply to state that he has a doubt about the correctness of the ruling.

The motion of Mr. BURNES was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JOHN CHUGRIM.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting additional evidence in the claim of John Chugrim, of Lincoln County, New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment, as Visitors to the Military Academy at West Point, of Mr. W. S. ROSECRANS of California, Mr. LEWIS BEACH of New York, and Mr. T. J. HENDERSON of Illinois.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY AT ANNAPOLIS.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment, as Visitors to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, of Mr. S. S. COX of New York, Mr. JOHN H. EVINS of South Carolina, and Mr. NATHAN GOFF of West Virginia.

COTTON CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. HANCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6856) to provide for the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, for the purpose of moving to concur in the Senate amendments. They are comparatively immaterial, changes of forms of expression, and I understand are acceptable to the Representatives from Louisiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendments be reported.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The amendments were read.

The bill, with the amendments of the Senate, was as follows:

[Strike out the words in brackets and insert the words in italics.]

Whereas by the act of Congress entitled "An act to encourage the holding of a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition in the year 1884," approved February 10, 1883, in the city of New Orleans, under the joint auspices of the United States, the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, and the said city of New Orleans, a world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition is to be held, universal in character, comprehending all arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine; and

Whereas by said act Congress declares that such exposition should be national and international in its character; and

Whereas under said act a board of management has been duly constituted and incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana, the members of which have been appointed by the President of the United States, upon recommendations made in the manner set forth in said act, and therefore are a duly qualified and commissioned United States board of management, clothed with full and adequate powers to perform any and all acts essential to the proper and necessary management of the affairs of the said World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition in the manner and form prescribed by said act, and duly authorized by the sanction of the Government of the United States to raise the capital necessary to carry into effect the provisions of said act of February 10, 1883; and

Whereas the President of the United States, in compliance with the terms and requirements of said act, has extended, in the name of the United States, a respectful and cordial invitation to the governments of other nations to be represented and take part in the said international exposition; and

[Whereas many of the governments so invited have accepted such invitations, and are making preparations to embrace the courtesy so extended to them, thereby rendering proper arrangements for the coming ceremonies on the part of the United States a matter of honor and good faith; and]

Whereas the preparations designed by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and in part executed by the board of management, are in accordance with the spirit of the act of Congress relating thereto, and are on a scale creditable to the Government and the people of the United States; and

Whereas all of the inducements which were involved and embodied in the request that Congress should grant the necessary aid to secure the success of the Centennial Exposition of Philadelphia are re-enforced by the progress and development of many States and Territories that were unable to avail of the beneficent policy inaugurated by the Government at Philadelphia, but are now desirous of an equal opportunity to display their agricultural, commercial, and industrial resources to the world; and

Whereas the stockholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition have furnished to aid in the completion of the said enterprise $500,000, and have determined to increase the same to $1,000,000 by a vote of a majority of said stockholders, and are now engaged in obtaining the same, and the said city of New Orleans has, in its corporate capacity, contributed the sum of $100,000 to secure the success of this national and international undertaking, and it is but just and equable that the Government whose people are to be universally affected and benefited by the said contributions and donations of these said citizens should lend its aid and credit to the said enterprise in a specific form calculated to enhance its dignity and capacity to accomplish the objects in view, to wit, the development and prosperity of the United States, and also because the results of the centennial celebration of 1876 have illustrated the wisdom of such national action:] Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a loan to the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, to be used and employed by the board of management thereof to augment and enhance the success of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition in such manner as said board of management may determine, and in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the said sum shall be paid by the [Treasurer] Secretary of the Treasury of the United States on the drafts of the president and [treasurer] secretary of the board of management of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, authorized by order of said board, one-third of the amount immediately after the passage of this act, upon being satisfied that $500,000 has been contributed and paid in to the said board for the purposes of the exposition by the contributors to and shareholders of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, and the remainder in four monthly payments thereafter, upon being satisfied that each of the prior payments has been faithfully applied as required by this act, and for this purpose he shall have free access to the accounts and all transactions of said board: Provided further, That no greater amount shall be expended or liability or indebtedness of any kind incurred upon buildings, grounds, and preparations than the aggregate sum that may be [secured by subscription] paid in by the subscribers to the capital stock and by donations and the amount of the loan provided herein: And provided further, That in the distribution of the amounts that may remain in the treasury of the board of management after the payments of the current expenses of administration the amount of the appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend or percentage of profits or assets shall be paid to the holders of said stock or contributors: Provided further, That the Government of the United States shall not, under any circumstances, be liable for any debt or obligation [for] created or incurred by the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, or its board of management, or for any sum whatever in addition to the [foregoing] amount [that may be] appropriated by this act; and that adequate space, to be determined by the President of the United States, for such exhibits as the Government of the United States may see proper to make at said exposition shall be furnished free of all charge by said board: Provided further, That no sum shall be paid to the [treasurer of the said exposition until after he and the president of the same] said board of management of said exposition until after the president, secretary, and a majority of the members of said board shall have executed a bond, with good and solvent security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of $300,000, to sufficiently secure the safe-keeping and the faithful disbursement of the sum hereby appropriated, and for the faithful observance of this act with regard to the limitation of expenditures and liabilities as fixed herein, and for the repayment to the Government of the United States of the surplus of proceeds of said exposition remaining after payment of the current expenses of administration, said repayment in no case to exceed the loan herein appropriated and provided for: And provided further, That the receipts of the loan herein made or any part thereof by said board of management shall be a full acceptance of all the trusts, conditions, provisions, and obligations of this act by the said board of management and by the corporation created under the laws of the State of Louisiana, and designated as "The World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition."

Amend the title so as to read:

An act to make a loan to aid in the celebration of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendments of the Senate just read?

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the former action of the House upon this bill, passing it by a very decisive majority, and in view of the fact that these amendments seem to furnish additional guarantees, if any can be furnished in this case, I do not feel myself called upon to interpose any objection.

Mr. HUNT. The bill is satisfactory in its present shape.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were taken up and concurred in.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT TO STATES FOR WAR ADVANCES.

Mr. STORM. I ask unanimous consent to offer for immediate consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, unless there is to be some equality of recognition between the two sides, I think we had better adjourn. I therefore move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution sent to the desk by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 2463, the same being a bill to provide for reimbursing certain States for sums by them paid for interest on certain advances made to the Government of the United States during the late war, be made a special order for Saturday, the 14th day of June, 1884, and from day to day until disposed of, not to interfere with prior orders or with appropriation bills, revenue bills, or bills reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I object.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, and Mr. WELLER moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr BLAND: Petition of Post No. 135, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Missouri, relative to pensions, &c.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOYLE: Petition of George D. Bayard Post, Grand Army of the Republic, for the passage of the pension laws recommended by the Grand Army of the Republic—to the same committee.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of 152 citizens of Rush County, Indiana, asking an appropriation of $400,000 to aid in maintaining Indian schools—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GEORGE: Memorial of Sedgwick Post No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, relative to pensions—to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. KASSON: Petition of D. J. Arnold and others, citizens of Iowa, against limiting the power of Congress by constitutional amendment—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKINLEY: Resolutions of Star Lodge No. 38, A. A. I. and S. W. U. S., Ohio, against the importation of old rails and scrap-iron—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PRICE: Resolutions of A. M. Howard Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, relative to pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 16, 1884.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MANZANARES, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for three days, on account of important business.

BRIDGE AT TONAWANDA, N. Y.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6761) respecting a bridge at Tonawanda, in the State of New York.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That any bridge erected in pursuance of chapter 279 of the laws of the State of New York of the year 1883, entitled "An act to incorporate the Tonawanda Island Bridge Company, for the purpose of constructing and operating a bridge from Tonawanda Island to North Tonawanda," is hereby declared to be a lawful structure: Provided, That the height of the lower chord of the draw of said bridge be not less than twenty-three feet above high water: Provided also, That said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plan and location of the bridge have been submitted to the Secretary of War and by him approved.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by striking out in lines 9 and 10 the words "Provided, That the height of the lower chord of the draw of said bridge be not less than twenty-three feet above high water," and also by striking out in line 11 the word "also." This amendment is approved by the Committee on Commerce and by the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORWARDING OF MAIL MATTER.

Mr. WAKEFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6578) to amend section 3940 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the forwarding of mail matter; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that Saturday, June 7, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. RICE. I object.

Mr. CASSIDY. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] will allow me to state that our committee has already a day assigned in the House for its business. We can have it at any time by antagonizing other orders. But we wish a specific day fixed. There is a bewildering amount of figures involved in some of our measures.

Mr. RICE. There have been objections to assigning days for other committees.

Mr. CASSIDY. We already have a day assigned.

Mr. THOMPSON. We have a special and continuing order, made in February last; but on account of the character of the business which we desire to have transacted, involving many statistics, we desire to have a specific day assigned, so that we may prepare ourselves to explain the measures to the House more intelligently and satisfactorily than we might do if we have not a special day assigned. The order we now ask will not interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or with any other special order. We expect to take up in the House the bill amendatory of the Thurman act relating to Pacific railroads.

Mr. RICE. I must object.

BRIDGE ACROSS WISCONSIN RIVER, ETC.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and put upon its passage the bill (H. R. 6539) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Wisconsin, Chippewa, and Saint Croix Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin. The bill provides simply for building some railroad bridges. Every interest on the streams is satisfied with the measure; the railroads are satisfied, the War Department is satisfied. The bridges are to be constructed entirely under the direction of the War Department. It is a matter about which I think there can be no debate and, if it is properly understood, no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6539) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Wisconsin, Chippewa, and Saint Croix Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Winona, Alma and Northern Railway Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and having authority to build its line of railroad from a point in the State of Illinois, through the State of Wisconsin, to a point in the State of Minnesota, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain, for the purpose of making a more perfect connection of its said line, the following railroad bridges, to be used by it, its successors or assigns, for railway purposes, over the rivers and at the localities named following, that is to say: Across the Wisconsin River, near the city of Prairie du Chien, Wis., at the most suitable and convenient point, within five miles of the confluence of the Wisconsin with the Mississippi River; across the Chippewa River, within five miles of its confluence with the Mississippi River; and across the Saint Croix River or Lake, at the most suitable and convenient point between the mouth of the Saint Croix River and the town of Hudson, Saint Croix County.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed and built without material interference with the security and convenience of navigation of said rivers, or either of them, beyond what is necessary to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted; and in order to secure a compliance with these conditions the corporation, previous to commencing the construction of the bridge, or of the accessory works in the booms, dikes, or piers designed to secure the best practical channel way for navigation and confine the flow of the water to a permanent channel, and for the guiding of steamboats and rafts safely through the draw-spans at said point, shall submit to the Secretary of War a plan of the bridge and of such accessory works, together with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge and for a distance of a mile above and below the site, together with all other information touching said bridge and river and accessory works as may be deemed requisite by the Secretary of War to determine whether the said bridge, when built, will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act; that, as nearly as practicable, the said bridge shall be at right angles to and the piers parallel with the current of said river; and if it be found hereafter that the said bridge or accessory works materially interfere with the security and convenience of navigation of said river beyond what is necessary to carry into effect the rights and privileges hereby granted, by reason of any defect or failure in the accessory works aforesaid to accomplish the purpose for which they are designed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to require the necessary changes to be made therein in the interest of navigation at the expense of the owners: Provided, That as to any bridge built under this act, if the said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, it shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred feet in length, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river and not less than two hundred feet in length: And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot-draw bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans not less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark at the point of location, and of not less length than stipulated below for the several bridges, namely: Over Lake Saint Croix the draw-span shall not be less than one hundred and sixty feet, and over the Chippewa River the draw-span shall not be less than one hundred and forty feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans shall not be less than one hundred and forty feet; over the Wisconsin River the draw-span shall not be less than one hundred feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans shall be not less than one hundred and twenty-five feet in length, unless otherwise expressly directed by the Secretary of War, and if so directed shall be according to such direction: Provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passing of boats; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe: Provided also, That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and of all the approaches thereto, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations, and proofs of the parties, in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving any such plan and map and other information, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and such accessory works and at such locality will conform to the prescribed conditions of this act, to notify the company that he approves the same; and upon receiving such notification the said company may proceed to an erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location; but until the Secretary of War approve the plan and location of said bridge and accessory works, and notify the company of the same, the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge or said accessory works during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That any bridge and accessory works, when built and constructed under this act and according to the terms and limitations thereof, shall be a lawful structure; and said bridge shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportations over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and said bridge shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-routes in the United States; and Congress reserves the right at any time to regulate by appropriate legislation the charges for freight and passengers over said bridge.

SEC. 5. That the United States shall have the right of way for postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in such structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection. The House Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH ADAMS.

Mr. CLAY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7011) for the relief of Joseph Adams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TACOMA AND SEATTLE PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask by unanimous consent that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6763) making the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in the Puget Sound customs district, in Washington Territory, ports of delivery, for present consideration.

The bill was read.

Mr. BRENTS. I ask the unanimous report of the committee be read.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof), and the morning hour was dispensed with.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6931, a bill (H. R. 7012) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the appropriation bill in order?

The SPEAKER. It is; but as this is private-bill day, the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar takes precedence.

Mr. MILLS. We can vote that motion down.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, we can vote it down, and then we can go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the appropriation bills.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 81.

So Mr. McMILLIN's motion was disagreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes. The Clerk will read the pending amendment, moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 289 add the following:

"For contingent expenses of United States consulates, such as stationery, bookcases, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, rent, freight, postage, and other necessary miscellaneous matters, $110,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was dividing, and the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. BURNES and Mr. CANNON resumed their places as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 96.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 227 to 281, inclusive, and insert:

"For the expense of providing stationery, blanks, record, and other books, $30,000; postage, $27,000; flags, $1,000; flag-staffs and fixtures, $3,000; furniture, $6,500; statistics, $6,000; telegrams, $2,500; services of experts in ascertaining the value of invoices, $4,500; freight, $4,000; moving consulates, $1,000; newspapers and prices-current, $2,000; books, $700; Chinese writers, $2,000; traveling expenses of consuls while engaged on official business, $5,000; seals and presses, $2,000; coats of arms of the United States, $1,000; advertising, $500; messengers for consulates, $2,000; publishing death-notices, $350; other necessary miscellaneous expenses, $3,000; being a total of $104,050."

Mr. CANNON. If I can have the attention of the committee and of the gentleman from Missouri for a few moments I desire to state simply that this amendment is offered for the purpose of providing by amendment, since the same has been omitted in the preparation of this bill, for the necessary expenses indicated by the amendment. Under the present bill as reported by this committee there can be no payments of money whatever for postage. Now the amount expended last year for postage amounted to $26,445 on official matter. I believe it to be the sense of this committee, at least I hope it is the sense of the committee, that that postage shall be paid. The amount expended for telegrams last year was $2,224. This provides a fund for the payment of telegrams on official business. The amount expended for necessary furniture for consulates last year was $6,503. It will be seen that this amendment makes provision for that item. The amount expended for freight was in round numbers $3,000. This provides for that. So also it provides for expert services in ascertaining the value of invoices. In other words, it proposes substantially to provide all these contingent expenses for which no provision is made in this bill, and which experience has shown are absolutely essential in the working of the Department. The objection, as I understand it, of the gentleman from Missouri as expressed on yesterday, at least one of his objections, is obviated by this amendment, for the reason that it makes a specific appropriation for each of these objects. Now, in the very nature of things, it must be apparent that there are certain items which can not be specifically provided for, so that those things for which specific provision can not be made are grouped together or provided for in a clause appended to the amendment which provides $3,000 for other necessary and miscellaneous expenses.

That is about all I wish to say upon the subject. If these consulates are to be maintained; if these consuls are to transact their business as our representative abroad, they must be provided with the means with which to do it. If they communicate to the Secretary of State so that the President and the Congress shall be provided with information as to what they are doing, they must have the money to pay for their postage. If they send telegrams when our Irish or German fellow-citizens or our native-born citizens, when traveling abroad, get into trouble in foreign countries, or when there is a shipwreck, they should have means of extending relief or sending information to the Government, and for this purpose there must be money provided to pay telegrams.

Mr. Chairman, if this money is not to be given for that purpose, then it is the part of fairness and the part of statesmanship to come up and meet the issue squarely and fairly and wipe out our whole consular and diplomatic service. And I ask this committee if it is not foolishness to the last degree to provide for a consular and diplomatic service at an expense of a million of dollars and then fail to provide the necessary hundred or two hundred thousand dollars, as the case may be, to enable them to do the work to which they are assigned?

I want to say one word in conclusion. I feel sure that the gentleman from Missouri will recognize the justice of this amendment; and if the itemized amendment is not specific enough I ask him to make the items more specific. From a business standpoint, from a standpoint of just legislation, I ask that the amendment, in substantially this shape or some other shape such as he may suggest, so that it will meet his views and provide for these necessary expenditures, shall be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, it would afford me a great deal of pleasure to accept the suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois if I could do so in justice to myself and in justice to the Committee on Appropriations and in justice to the interests of the country at large.

I desire, sir, to call attention again to the fact that section 1748 of the Revised Statutes authorizes the payment of certain expenses of ministers and consuls. For these items a full appropriation has been made; but in addition to that the gentleman comes and says that there are other items of expenditure that ought to be appropriated for. I answer him by reference to section 1743 of the Revised Statutes, that the salaries of ministers and consuls shall be in full of all personal expenses of whatever name or nature, whether incurred by treaty or statute or instructions of the Department; and also by reference to one more statute, section 1696, which provides that the postage to consuls not under salary shall be paid by the Department.

Now, I say the amount to pay the postage of non-salaried consuls is appropriated by law; and it is only the postage of the salaried consuls. This is the conclusion of law. But I should not press it if it were not for another consideration.

I must now call the attention of the committee to some matters that I would have preferred to have left unsaid and unpublished. Without prejudice against this Department the Appropriations Committee has been impressed by—I may call them—certain official delinquencies to which the attention of the gentlemen representing the other side of this bill has been called. I shall not dwell upon these, but shall be content simply to say, in view of the partial answer made by the distinguished gentlemen from Illinois, both of them, that under the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 11, 1874, not the act of 1856, the Secretary established the following as the maximum amounts of time actually necessary to make the transit from Washington to the following posts. The statement shows the amounts which can be paid for the thirty days and the additional time consumed in traveling from Washington to the diplomatic or consular post.

The Secretary of State has established that in addition to the thirty days to Apia "seventy days shall be allowed" for transit. If you take thirty days and the seventy days, amounting to one hundred days, and reckon the salary at $3,000, the salary now being paid and the salary paid at the time, you will find there was paid to the consul at Apia $1,190.23, when he was entitled to but $821.91. You will find that the time to Cairo is thirty-five days. Add thirty-five to thirty and you have sixty-five days. There is a salary of $5,000. There are sixty-five days for which he is entitled to $890.41; and the Department has paid him $1,657.62. Take Rio de Janeiro. The Department has allowed to make the trip to Washington forty days; add forty to thirty and there are seventy days. The salary is $6,000 per annum. There have been paid to the consul $1,565.21, when under the law and the regulations of the Department he was entitled to but $1,150.68; a difference of $414.53.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BURNES.

Mr. BURNES. I thank my colleague. Take now the city of Florence. The Secretary of State has allowed twenty-five days. Add twenty-five to thirty and you have fifty-five days. You find that this consul has received nearly twice as much, lacking $5, as the law and the instructions of the Department entitle him to.

Mr. REED. What consul is that?

Mr. BURNES. The consul at Florence. Go to the city of Rome, where we have a return from a grand consul-general, who receives a salary of $3,500, with fees returned of $915. You find him drawing contingent expenses to the amount of $1,059.12—$100 more than all the fees of his office—and you find another thing: that to transmit that $915 from Rome to London—because I presume it was transferred to the financial agent at London; but no matter whether it was transferred to London or transferred to Washington—for exchange on that $915 this consul-general in the Eternal City charged $182.24.

I know there are bankers on this floor who understand the rates of exchange. I do not mention these matters for the purpose of impugning the integrity of the Department or of the distinguished gentleman who is at its head. But I mention them for the purpose of arousing the judgment of this House in behalf of the limitation of these general items of expenditure, which under the discretion of a kind-hearted and generous old gentleman can not be withheld from greedy consuls and greedy ministers.

Mr. Chairman, I have here the whole list, and I ask permission to have it printed as a part of my remarks. It will be information that you can look at at your leisure. This relates only to the consulates that have been abolished or changed or altered; but you will find here such extravagance and apparant irresponsibility with regard to this contingent fund that you will feel as I feel, that it is best to limit this Department to the most careful requirements of the strict letter of the law. I submit these statements with regard to the various posts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks consent to print as a part of his remarks the statements he has indicated. If there be no objection the request will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The statements referred to by Mr. BURNES are as follows:

Under the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 11, 1874, the Secretary of State established the following as the maximum amount of time actually necessary to make the transit from Washington to the following ports:

For not making report for the last quarter of expenses the consul writes us a consular tract on "The temperance movement in Denmark." He failed to write us of the commerce or trade of Denmark, but he gives us the price of a basin of good soup at the temperance lunch-rooms. He admiringly describes the rooms, but not the financial transactions of his consulate, in which this Government is interested.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the last word.

The criticisms which the gentleman from Missouri has made are upon the details of the accounts of several officers. In order to respond to them fully I should want to examine in detail the accounts of those officers. The inconsistency between the time allowance of a consul going from here to Apia and the amount of money we find charged for transit expenses will perhaps be found explained in the simple fact that that officer was a consul in Germany who was transferred from the post in Europe and allowed the time coming to America to report at Washington and then the thirty days to proceed to this Pacific island. I have not seen the accounts of the consul, but the accounts as rendered to the Department must set out in detail the days occupied in the journey.

Mr. BURNES. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him one question in that connection?

Mr. HITT. With pleasure.

Mr. BURNES. If the consul receiving this extra leave had come home from Germany and received pay for coming home from the consulate in Germany it would have been charged to the German consulate and not to the one to which he was subsequently accredited.

Mr. HITT. It might have been, but not necessarily. He is appointed consul to Apia and is ordered from the place where he is found to the place of his new duty, and I suppose his path there was prescribed in the order. I have not examined the accounts, but that is perhaps the explanation. Remember, too, the time allowed to go to Apia is not determined by law, but by order of the Secretary, which in general is the regulation; but if the consul in fact could not get there within seventy days, the Secretary has the power under the law to make the allowance in accordance with the fact and truth; or it may in this case include the account of the returning consul.

In regard to the complaints of the gentleman as to the large amount of money which he thinks was wrongfully received by the consul at Rome for exchange, I may say that it is money which the consul or the other officer of the Government never sees. There is a bank or a financial agency to which his accounts, including salary, are presented for payment, and he is paid the amount of his salary in the money of the country as determined by the tables of the Secretary of the Treasury, a public document; and the financial agent of the Government turns our money into the money of the country where he is. He charges our Government with the loss in exchange or he credits it with the gain. It is a simple question of exchange. Such items are in every account of every consular and diplomatic officer. They are entirely beyond the control of the officer himself; they are questions of banking and finance with which he has nothing to do. The considerable amount which was paid in the case he complains of will be found to be accounted for in the banker's account, which will be seen to cover, not the fees, as the gentleman supposes, which are absorbed and accounted for at the consulate, but all payments to the consulate, including the salary. I have not seen those particular accounts of which I have just heard for the first time, and can not explain their details; but as I can not conceive any motive on the part of the officer to exaggerate the account, as he can not in any way gain anything in the matter of exchange, I can not credit even a suspicion of any fraudulent intent on his part or that of the Department where he could have received no benefit from it.

The consul at Rio went by way of Europe, and was, I suppose, some time waiting his exequatur after getting to Rio, though it is briefly described in the Auditor's report under the head of instructions and transit.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word here, because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] thought proper to refer to my colleague [Mr. HITT] and myself in his last remarks. He claims that although he has made the charges and now makes them again, he has received no explanation or denial from myself or my colleague. I want to say here and now that so far as the gentleman charges the Secretary of State and necessarily the Treasury Department, which audits and controls these accounts, with misfeasance or malfeasance in the expenditures of these moneys, I repel the charge.

Mr. BURNES. I trust the gentleman will allow me to interpose a moment at this point.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BURNES. I have not said one solitary word that the gentleman can torture into an insinuation against the personal integrity of either the Secretary of State or the Secretary of the Treasury; or, if I have, it was altogether unintentional. I have implicit confidence, and have so stated on this floor, in the integrity and honor of both those Secretaries. But I have not that confidence perhaps in the integrity of the entire personnel of those Departments.

Mr. REED. Against whom do you make charges?

Mr. BURNES. I charge nobody. I simply assert a fact, and ask that these figures be met, not by general declamation, but by facts and figures.

Mr. REED. Have you presented these figures to the State Department with the request for an explanation?

Mr. BURNES. I have not presented all of them.

Mr. REED. Which ones have you presented?

Mr. BURNES. I have presented some of the items of this character to the Department and asked for an explanation, which up to this day has not been given to me.

Mr. REED. When did you present them and what particular items were they?

Mr. BURNES. Cairo especially.

Mr. REED. When was that presented?

Mr. BURNES. A month ago, perhaps six weeks.

Mr. REED. I hope you will lay before the House your manner of presentation—the letter in which you requested the explanation.

Mr. BURNES. I will do so with a great deal of pleasure. It will afford me a great deal of pleasure to do so. I say to my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] that in company with my distinguished colleague on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], I repaired to the Department of State and had a conversation of several hours with the Secretary of State, the First Assistant Secretary, and I believe with the Third Assistant Secretary of State, at all events it was with a gentleman who is deaf, and we had to use a speaking-trumpet to converse with him. We discussed with those three gentlemen this matter of the Apia consul awaiting instructions.

The gentleman wants to know the manner of asking the explanation. The Secretary said: "Mr. Davis, can you explain that matter?" Mr. Davis put his speaking-trumpet to the ear of the Third Secretary of State and asked him if he could explain it. The Third Secretary talked to him in a foreign language, and then Mr. Davis informed me that they would communicate to me an explanation of that transaction in a short time.

Mr. HITT. Did that relate to Cairo?

Mr. BURNES. It related to Apia.

Mr. HITT. I have made some explanation in regard to Apia which I think is a correct explanation, but I have not had any figures before me and hence I could not state all the facts in detail. But I may say in regard to Cairo that that officer was kept by the Egyptian Government two months awaiting exequatur; and it is to be remembered that the expenses there are many of them large and such as are peculiar to that Mohammedan country. There were guards, interpreters, gratuities which are really wages, carriages, and other things which were necessary, and the expenses were greatly increased owing to the war and all the disorder, in which many needed protection, and the emergency required unusual expense, especially telegraphing and special couriers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I only wish to say a word or two further. I have yielded my time (as I was perfectly willing to do) to other gentlemen.

The Committee on Appropriations, which prepared this bill, and of which I am a member, has never, so far as I know, investigated touching the accounts of the State Department. The matter was never called to my attention in committee. There is a Committee on the Expenditures of the State Department. It is the duty of that committee to investigate touching these accounts, and if there has been wrong-doing, either on the part of the Secretary or any subordinate, to recommend action upon the part of the House.

But what does the gentleman from Missouri seek to do? When I ask an appropriation for postage and telegrams for the whole consular service he proceeds to play cuttle-fish, and goes on to Apia and the consulship at Cairo, and says too much was allowed to the consular officers at these places while they were traveling out or were awaiting orders. That may or not be true. For the purposes of this amendment I do not care whether it is true or not, because the amendment now being considered does not contain any item for the payment of that kind of expenses.

If the methods of administration in the Department of State need to be corrected, correct them by the proper proceedings, but do not come in here and talk about Apia when I talk about official postage, telegrams, and necessary contingent expenses for the whole consular service the world round.

I am not the special champion or defender of the State Department. When anything shall be alleged against it, when charges have been put in black and white and have received a full and fair investigation from a committee of this House, I stand ready to defend that Department, or the Treasury Department, if it ought to be defended; but until such a case is presented I am not called upon, this side of the House is not called upon, nobody else is called upon to rise and make an explanation upon a mere innuendo that dwells in the vague suspicion of the gentleman from Missouri, or, perhaps, of some disappointed and removed ex-consul who has poured into the ears of the gentleman his griefs in the shape of complaints against the Secretary of State and the State Department. All I ask now is that this service be not cut up root and branch by the withholding of just and proper appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly desire to commend the industry of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BURNES) in searching out all these delinquencies. I hope that in regard to all branches of the Government, including the legislative department, he will be equally earnest and diligent. When he or any other gentleman undertakes to use on the hustings these discrepancies or assumed irregularities in the accounts of the Secretary of State to show the corruption of Republican administration, I hope he will read to his audience this provision of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 40. The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

I hope the gentleman from Missouri, when in the presence of his constituents he calls to account the Secretary of State, will tell those constituents whether he has ever received as a member of this House one dollar of pay that he was not entitled to under the statute.

Mr. CANNON. I call the gentleman from New York to order. I do not think it is in order for him to break up the horse-race to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not time yet for gentlemen to go.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose when we come to the legislative appropriation bill the gentleman from Missouri will cut down the fund for the pay of members; will, in the interest of economy, insist that every member of the House who has been absent, except on account of the sickness of himself or some member of his family, shall submit to a proper per diem reduction upon his compensation. I shall be delighted to have the Committee on Appropriations investigate and report upon this question.

Mr. BURNES. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BURNES. I will merely say in response to his remarks that I desire to go back to my constituents and say that in perfect justice and fairness to the State Department I assisted in the passage of an appropriation bill which allowed every item that the law allowed, and no more.

Furthermore, I say again it is not fair to charge that I have attempted to impugn by insinuation or direct charge the integrity of either the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of State.

One word more. I wish to say to my friend from New York, so that he may feel easy on the subject, that when I go to my constituents I want to say that if I have taken a little more salary than the strict letter of the law required, I did so simply because I did not want it to appear that I was any better than the majority of the House; that I have only complied with the prevailing custom and taken just what the majority of my fellow-members took, because I was afraid to be better than the generality of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. That will always be a good excuse in the mouth of a person who is able to make it himself.

Now, what I protest against is bringing into the discussion here not charges, but statements. By a gentleman who is not now present, and therefore I will not name him, a member of the Cabinet was some days since arraigned for delinquences. No charges were intended; nothing wrong was stated to have been done; the official was paraded as a man of great energy, great sagacity, and great ability; no one had the slightest suspicion that he had ever done anything out of the way; but nevertheless statements were made upon which you could hang an argument that something was wrong. Now, I certainly accept the statement of the gentleman from Missouri that he intends no charges against the Secretary of State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. The proposition which is before the committee, Mr. Chairman, is to vote certain items to be expended for the transaction of the public business. Everybody in this House knows that those items cover legitimate expenditure. Everybody knows that it is impossible for the public business to go on except by the expenditure of those items, and nobody knows it better than a practical business man like the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. And he is called upon to answer the proposition of appropriating items by the committee for the public business, and I pronounce here in his presence his answer to be an evasion of the question at issue. He says the law now does not give these items, and yet he knows every appropriation bill, which is the law that covers these matters, for the last twenty-five years has given a contingent fund which does cover these items. Now, how can he look us in the face and make that asseveration? He does it on the same basis that he answers a proposition for postage by the statement that the appropriation for mileage has been exceeded. He gets up here and makes statements which, if the inference he draws from them is correct, certainly does charge somebody in the State Department with malfeasance in office, and yet he gets up here and in the most profuse manner declares such is not the intention. It does seem to me that it would have been more frank to have put it the other way.

These matters undoubtedly will be answered item by item; but whether they are answered or not they have nothing to do with the question of proper appropriations for the public expenditures. If every dollar of the contingent fund of the last year had been embezzled the duty of Congress to appropriate a contingent fund and then to investigate the men who embezzled it and punish them would be the same. No matter whether money in the past has been properly used or not, if the expenditure is a proper one it is the duty of Congress to make an appropriation. And if there has been malfeasance in office it is the duty of the gentleman from Missouri and others who believe with him to take proper steps to punish those who have improperly kept it.

It does seem to me the House owes it to itself to enable the Executive Departments, even if they are of different political faith, to transact the public business, and if they are guilty of bad action in office they will have the support on this side to put down improper practices if they know of them. And the Departments know it as well as the House knows it. The question before the House is not whether any member of the State Department has violated his duty; the question is whether these expenditures are proper for the public business.

What man ever hired a clerk and then required him to pay for telegrams and postage of the business house which hired him? Nobody on the face of the earth ever thought of transacting public business in that way. It does seem to me the gentleman from Missouri can understand that matter as well as anybody else, and he ought to give this House some arguments to show the expenditure for telegrams and postage-stamps and for the other items contained in this amendment are not legitimate expenses of the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I renew it; and I do it for the purpose, Mr. Chairman, of answering as far as I can the insinuation made by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Maine. This side of the House has been brought to task because it is said we are making appropriations on a supposition, or the insinuation rather, that the money may not possibly be honestly expended, and they call our attention to the fact we ought to make appropriations and investigate afterward. The gentleman from Maine assures us if the money is appropriated and there is any dishonesty his side of the House and his party will punish those who are guilty. The past history of that party does not warrant that statement. I remember, Mr. Chairman, when the Post-Office Department, under the management of Mr. Brady, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, demanded an extra appropriation of something over $2,000,000, if I remember correctly the amount, as a deficiency, and demanded that a Democratic House should make the appropriation or the mail service of the country would cease. We were then told by that side of the House this appropriation ought to be made. We undertook to investigate the matter, and it was difficult to ascertain the facts. They were a little too sharp. They covered up their tracks and we were compelled under duress to make the appropriation; and while the whole country is satisfied this money was stolen by thieves in the Post-Office Department, yet not a single one of the thieves has yet been brought to justice.

And how was it with the Navy Department? We were called upon to make large appropriations for that Department. An investigation afterward showed the money was squandered by somebody, and not one thief has yet been brought to justice by the other side of the House. I know nothing of this appropriation; but I repudiate the idea that when you suspect anything wrong in a Department it is possible to ferret it out or punish the wrong-doer. Experience has shown here that you can not; and hence all you can do is to cut down the appropriations to the lowest possible figure that will provide the necessary amounts for the public expenditures and leave no room for exceeding them.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate, unless by unanimous consent we can take a vote now.

Mr. CANNON. I think there will be but five minutes longer desired in the discussion of this question on this side.

Mr. BURNES. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be limited to five minutes, to be occupied by gentlemen in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that will be understood as the order of the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I only want a few moments to reply to the suggestions of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] who has just taken his seat. I do not propose now, although I will at some other time, to go fully into the general questions he has started, but shall confine myself to this present question, which is a business proposition, and to the statement he made in relation to it. He says that if money has been improperly expended the only method to remedy the wrong is to cut down the appropriations. Now, if the cutting down of the appropriations had any logical application to the misapplication of any of the money, that argument might have some weight with those who believe in it. But the gentleman from Missouri on my right [Mr. BURNES] in charge of this bill proposes to cut down the appropriation for postage in our diplomatic service because the appropriation for mileage has been misused. I ask how that argument can logically apply? You know that we must have telegraphic and postal communication between the State Department and its subordinates. It is a necessity the existence of which can not be denied, and this amendment provides money for it, the bill having failed to make such provision.

Every man on this side of the House as well as on the other side knows that that appropriation has got to be made, and that you and I have got finally to vote for it. Now, you can not have, it seems to me, any business motive for withholding the appropriation. I ask you then whether it is worth while under such circumstances to refuse money which you know ought to be appropriated, and which you know has got to be appropriated before this bill passes through Congress? And if you think by reciting to the people of this country a bead-roll of items of this character, made up without any foundation in business sense and supported by no argument, then you will permit me to say that you pay to the people of the United States a left-handed compliment which in due time they will return to you. That is all I desired to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; the committee divided, and there were—ayes 68, noes 71.

Mr. HITT. I call for tellers.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. BURNES were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the expense of a prison and prison-keeper at the consulate-general in Bangkok, Siam, $1,000.

For the actual expense of renting a prison at Shanghai for American convicts in China, $750; and for the wages of a keeper of such prison, $800.

For the actual expense of renting a prison in Kanagawa for American convicts in Japan, $600; and for the wages of a keeper of such prison, $800.

For the purpose of paying the keepers of prisoners in China, Japan, Siam, and Turkey, the sum of $5,000: Provided, That no more than 75 cents per day for the keeping and feeding of each prisoner, while actually confined, shall be allowed or paid to any such keeper; and such payment shall cover all expenses attending the keeping, feeding, and care of any such prisoner.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out from lines 290 to 306, inclusive, and insert what I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk had read the section ending with line 306.

Mr. CANNON. My motion is to strike out from line 290 to and including line 306.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 290 to 306, inclusive, and insert:

"For rent of prisons for American convicts in Siam and Turkey, and for wages of keepers of the same, $2,000.

"For rent of prison for American convicts in China, $1,500.

"For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses in China, $9,500.

"For rent of prison for American convicts in Japan, $750.

"For wages of keepers, care of offenders, and expenses in Japan, $5,000.

"For rent of court-house and jail, with grounds, appurtenant, at Yeddo, or such other place in Japan as shall be designated, $3,850."

Mr. BURNES. I have not the bill before me, sir, but it occurs to me that this paragraph has been passed over. The clerk of the committee who is keeping the record of the proceedings on the bill is not present, but it seems to me that we have passed over certain sections of the bill already which are proposed to be amended by this paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. This is offered at the conclusion of the paragraph just read as an amendment to that paragraph and the three preceding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk, the Chair will state, had read four paragraphs of the bill. Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois suggested an amendment to the first three sections and a part of the fourth section, moving to strike out all of the four sections and insert that which has been read in lieu of them.

Mr. BURNES. I apprehend it would be improper for the amendment to be considered as regards the first three paragraphs which it proposes to strike out.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my colleague on the committee the gentleman from Missouri in the consideration of this bill, cut up as it is, the practice has been, as he well knows, to offer a substitute for two or three paragraphs as one amendment; and I supposed that practice still obtained.

Mr. BURNES. I am not aware of the practice the gentleman refers to, but I desire to throw myself on the knowledge of the Chair. As a matter of course the gentleman from Illinois will remember he notified us we could not go on yesterday evening, and I do not know that I feel inclined to yield to him any point this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state this was done several times yesterday during the consideration of the bill. Still, under the rule, each paragraph is before the committee separately for amendment, and it is only by unanimous consent that any paragraph which has been passed over can be returned to. It is only now strictly in order to move to strike out the last paragraph which was read. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Illinois whether he desires to ask the committee that the amendment in its present form shall be entertained by unanimous consent?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has notified the committee that unanimous consent can not be had. And I will state further again to the gentleman from Missouri, that there may be no question about it, that I supposed from yesterday's proceeding on two or three occasions there would be no objection to reading the two or three paragraphs and then saving time by moving to strike out the whole and inserting the amendment proposed, because the amendment covers the whole subject-matter. Resting upon that supposition from the practice that had obtained before, I refrained from offering the amendment to save time until the whole paragraph had been read. But if it is the sense of my colleague to make the point of order that as to three of the paragraphs the amendment comes too late, that is his privilege.

Mr. STORM. I object to going back to the paragraphs which have been passed over. I was watching for the purpose of making the point of order if necessary, but supposed that the amendment which was offered related only to the last paragraph read by the Clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think with the understanding that the subject will be disposed of at once without consumption of time the objection will not be insisted on.

Mr. STORM. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] withdraws his objection. The Chair is not informed whether there is any other objection.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can never beat us in liberality. If he really desires that the objection shall be waived to including in his amendment the paragraphs which have been passed from, I feel that I can not deny him that favor.

Mr. CANNON. I do not put it on the ground of favor——

Mr. BURNES. Well, I will say courtesy.

Mr. CANNON. I put it on the ground of the practice which has been followed in the consideration of this bill. Nor am I here to assent—although I do not intend to speak at any great length—to have any limitation put upon me in the discussion of this matter save such as the rules of the committee and of the House put upon me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will make my speech about this matter, as I proposed to do when I rose, and I will occupy but a minute; because it does not suit my pleasure to speak longer than a minute, and for no other reason whatever.

The total of appropriations to sustain these prisoners and feed the prisoners under our system of consular courts in the Oriental countries this year is $22,600. The appropriation proposed by this bill is $8,950; a decrease of $13,650. This Government has entered into solemn treaties with the Oriental countries, under which our consuls hold courts to try men for crime and dispose of property where our citizens and the citizens of the Oriental countries are litigants. To make the courts effective you have got to have power to enforce their decrees and judgments. This takes away that power. If it is the sense of a Democratic House to absolutely turn loose the lawless in foreign lands where it is our right to protect our people against them, so be it; take the responsibility and do it. I call for a vote.

Mr. BURNES. I might very well leave this question to the committee without any remark. But there has been so much said about cutting down expenditures without regard to rhyme or reason that I propose to defend it for a moment.

It is in appearance rather than in fact that this appropriation is reduced. That is to say, if the reports that we have had with regard to the expense in China and Japan are reliable, then the appropriation is not reduced; and those who maintain that it is reduced must take a position against the action of the Department.

We have here made an appropriation for these consular courts, and we have made ample provision for these consular prisons. But the trouble is that we have struck one blow at reform. Instead of allowing the jailer to go out upon his own motion and purchase supplies to run a boarding-house for the benefit of himself, and it may be of the Government officers and guests of the Government officers living at the port, we have simply made an appropriation for the purpose of paying him so much per diem for keeping the prisoners in the jail. I need not go into detail and I know there are Republican gentlemen in this House who have the same information that outrageous abuses have occurred in China and perhaps in Japan in regard to the expenses of maintaining those consular prisons. And now instead of authorizing our agents there to maintain a large establishment for the purpose of supplying the prisoners with food, we furnish the prison-house and the prison-keeper and we make him at his own expense feed prisoners for so much per diem. That is the only change we have made.

One word more. The greatest consular scandal that has ever grown out of the consular service in this country is connected with the consulate at Shanghai. Many of you know more about it than I do I tell you that the scandal is not yet at an end. In saying this I mean no reflection upon the present administration of the State Department, because it may be that the hands of the Secretary of State are tied by the machinations of a foreign consul at that place, so that he has to do what he is doing. But this committee will perhaps be amazed when told that China furnished the ground to the United States as a compliment to our flag; that the ground was accepted by the consul for the benefit of one of his friends around the corner, to put it in no plainer language, and that friend built a house upon it, made an imaginary line and divided the building into apartments for a post-office, court-house, jail, consular office, &c. Then a lease for a term of years was made, and that lease has not yet expired, by which nearly double the amount that ought to have been expended for this purpose was expended in behalf of the owner of that property, who, as I am informed, is but another name for the former consul at that port.

I mention these things, and why? Because, to its credit I say it, the present State Department, realizing the danger in which it stood and in which it stands, has ordered our minister to China to make a thorough investigation of all these subjects, and I have no doubt that our Secretary of State intends to make a full and fair investigation. When he makes his report if anything is lacking we can give it. But at present we can never relieve this Government from the stain placed upon it by a man who bears an honorable name until we strike at this item of appropriation in the manner in which this bill does.

Mr. CANNON. I here and now deny and call for the proof of any abuse in the expenditure of keeping prisons and prisoners during the present fiscal year or the last fiscal year. I here and now deny that there is any abuse whatever in the expenditure of this twenty-odd thousand dollars now given under the law for this purpose. I here and now affirm that every dollar of that amount is necessary to maintain these prisons and the prisoners at the consular ports all around the world where we have treaties. And I call upon the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to give us item by item wherein the full amount is unnecessary. As to what scandals may have existed in former years in connection with a consulate I do not know. Some years ago it was claimed that there were abuses touching the consulate at Shanghai. That consul is not now in office and has not been for years. In the administration of the one hundred and odd thousand office-holders under this Government I have no doubt that some time or other some one or more of them may prove to be bad men; it would be strange if such was not the case. If there are bad men among them then impeach them; if there are bad men then expose them.

But when my friend from Missouri, on this simple business proposition, gets up here and undertakes again to play cuttle-fish, and instead of arguing the amendment which I have offered wanders off about old straw, travels over old ground that was traveled over by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] long years before the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] had the honor to be a member of this House, I apprehend that he is neither logical, strong, nor satisfactory in his attack.

Mr. BURNES. I have the figures here, which I can give in answer to the gentleman if he desires.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CANNON, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, $40,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out $40,000 and inserting $50,000.

The sum of $50,000 is what has been heretofore appropriated in order that the Government might be prepared for emergencies which require the merciful intervention of the Government to save the lives of our seamen and protect them throughout the world. It may be that all of that amount will not be needed. Sometimes far less than that amount is used; but at other times much more is required. Five years ago $70,000 was required at a single consulate when the great whaling fleet of the Northern Pacific Ocean was wrecked.

It is a fund of precaution; it is a fund of protection, a fund of mercy. The usual amount, $50,000, is deemed by the Department and has been deemed by Congress heretofore as not too large. I therefore move this amendment in order that the law may stand as it now is. The changes which will be produced in our law by the shipping bill, if it passes, will make every dollar of this necessary.

Mr. BURNES. One moment. I am not willing that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] should go without any reply, after he has so vociferously denied the statements I have made, without offering any proof to sustain his denial, although with the Department of State and its officers to assist him it was easy for him to give facts and figures rather than mere declamation.

Now, the consul-general in China returned $5,449.12; he received a salary of $5,000 a year; he is allowed for clerk-hire, $2,000; for contingent expenses, $1,693; for rent of jail, $1,116; for wages of keeper of jail, $3,049; for marshal for consular court, $1,000; for interpreters, $1,939.92; making a total of from $14,000 to $15,000. I will not now do more than simply call attention to these figures to show the extraordinary expenditures of that consulate.

One word in regard to the paragraph under consideration and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]. The Department of State expended last year for this purpose $30,000, and no more. It may be that we can not now determine exactly how much will be needed for next year. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in the exuberance of his fancy the other day seemed to think that he could determine by weather-signs exactly how many storms would occur, and that $50,000 would be necessary for aiding seamen. It may be so; but, if so, he is the weather prophet, and we are not the Wigginses of the House.

But, sir, as $30,000 was expended for this purpose last year, and as we propose to allow in this bill $40,000, $10,000 more than the expenditure of last year for the same purpose, I submit that our appropriation is ample, and that to appropriate more would be to do what our friend from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] opposes so bitterly, that is, to load up the Treasury with a superabundance of money.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether this appropriation for relief and protection includes the bringing home of shipwrecked sailors from foreign ports to this country.

Mr. BURNES. No, sir.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Is there a special appropriation for that purpose in some other part of the bill?

Mr. BURNES. There was an estimate; there is no appropriation.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HITT, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses which may be incurred in the acknowledgment of the services of masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing American citizens from shipwreck, $4,500.

Mr. HITT. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 320 the following:

"To meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended under the direction of the President, pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this provision is one familiar to the experienced members of this body, to those who have had to deal with questions concerning our foreign relations. This is a fund placed at the disposal of the Department to be disbursed when necessary in order to prevent violations of our duty of preserving neutrality between our people and foreign nations.

This money has been employed chiefly in ascertaining and preventing attempted descents upon regions adjacent to the United States where there has been disturbance brewing, the disturbances being fomented from places within the United States. There is at this moment such an expedition disturbing the peace of a colony of Spain near by us, and this at the very time that our minister is engaged in negotiating with Spain and our Government is making a strenuous endeavor to secure from that power substantial advantages for our commerce. Our State Department has in fact within a few months secured a considerable relaxation of the harsh terms that were imposed upon our trade with the island of Cuba, conditions which have been oppressive to American citizens and which we are all anxious to see made more liberal and more conducive to our export trade.

This is a carefully audited expenditure, which never has been permitted to be published in the ordinary way by the press, but every detail of which is open to the examination of those who, like committees of this House, are properly authorized to see it, when it is shown to them in official confidence. For many years it has been the usage for Congress to make this provision; and this amendment is now proposed in pursuance of that policy.

The amendment of Mr. HITT was not agreed to.

Mr. McCOID. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to a part of the bill which has been passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Belgium," in line 206, insert "Che Foo, China;" and in line 209 strike out "$34,000" and insert "$35,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this amendment?

Mr. BURNES. I think there can be no objection to the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from Missouri does not object, I do not.

Mr. McCOID. I ask that the amendment be adopted.

There being no objection, the amendment was considered and adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of enabling the President to provide at the public expense all such stationery, blanks, record, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, $15,500.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the paragraph just read and insert the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all the missions abroad, $85,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the ear of the gentleman in charge of this measure and of the committee, I think I can show by the record that there is a discrepancy between the appropriation made for the purposes in the pending paragraph and the appropriations made by previous Congress for similar purposes which is somewhat confounding.

If we intend to continue our consular service, sufficient provision must be made for it, and I take it that previous Houses—Democratic Houses—so understood this question. I read from the Statutes at Large, volume 20, embracing the acts of the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, for this identical purpose, as will be seen:

For contingent expenses of United States consulates, such as stationery, bookcases, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, rent, freight, postage, and other necessary matters, including loss by exchange, $115,000.

At the third session of the same Congress, a Democratic House made, in the same language, for the same purpose for which this bill proposes to appropriate the meager sum of $15,000, an appropriation of $135,000. In the next Congress, the House being again Democratic, I find there was in the first session an appropriation for this same purpose in the same terms, of $125,000; and in the session that followed an appropriation of the same amount.

No excess is reported by the Secretary of State in either instance. I find in the last Congress—last session—that the sum of $85,000 was appropriated, and according to the report of the Secretary of State $79,133 has been expended so far, leaving a balance of $5,867 on hand. But there are outstanding accounts estimated to the extent of $10,000, which will bring the total amount expended the present fiscal year to $90,000.

I beg the House to be patient until the Clerk can read a telegram which I received from the State Department yesterday on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, May 15.

To Hon. J. FLOYD KING:

Central America: Only salaried posts are Ruatan, in Honduras, $1,000, and San Juan, in Nicaragua, $1,000. The others are all compensated by fees. So Government must depend upon a citizen of the town or a United States citizen who happens to be temporarily there on other and private business. There is a minister accredited to all the States of Central America, but the lack of mail and telegraphic communication, or of means of traveling from one post to another, except by occasional coast steamers and upon mules through the country, makes it extremely difficult for him. There are nine principal consular officers in Central America, seven of whom are compensated by fees. Some of the offices can not be kept filled because of the insufficient compensation. The present bill contemplates a consul at the capital of each Central American State, but the salary of $1,500 is inadequate, as the consul must pay his traveling expenses to his post, his personal expenses there, and certain Government expenses, such as postage, telegraphing, &c., for which no provision is made in the bill. We should provide these countries with most of the manufactures they consume and with a large amount of food products. Consular officers, Americans, with a single interest to the good of the United States, are necessary to develop this trade. In South America we have in Ecuador only one representative, a fifteen-hundred-dollar consul at Guayaquil. The bill proposes a secretary of legation at Quito at $1,500.

It is improbable that an American citizen would go there for that compensation, paying numerous Government contingent expenses out of his own pocket. In Bolivia, if this bill pass, we shall have a secretary of legation at $1,500 and some feed consuls. The fees amount to nothing. In Chili there are only two salaried consular officers, one at Valparaiso receiving $3,000, and one at Talcahuano receiving $1,000. Valparaiso is the seaport of Santiago, and principal commercial place in Chili. Talcahuano is an important port for our shipping, especially whaling vessels. In the Argentine Republic the only salaried consular officer is at Buenos Ayres. In Brazil there are five salaried consular officers—the consul-general at Rio at $6,000, consul at Rio Grande do Sul at $1,000, one at Pernambuco $2,000, one at Pará $1,500, one at Bahia $1,500. Except at Rio and possibly at Pernambuco these salaries are insufficient. All these places are seaport towns and should import very largely from the United States. In Venezuela there are three paid consulates, La Guayra, and Puerto Cabello, each $1,500, and Maracaibo $2,000. In Colombia there is a salaried consulate at Panama and another at Aspinwall. The others are feed officers, and except Barranquilla, the fees are insufficient to attract any one from the United States not engaged in private business. In Peru there is one salaried consulate at Callao. The present bill abolishes the mission to Bolivia by giving the minister to Chili jurisdiction over it, and gives the minister to Peru jurisdiction over Ecuador, which leaves the missions as follows: Minister each in Venezuela, Brazil, Argentine Republic, and Colombia, a minister to Peru and Ecuador, and a minister to Chili and Bolivia.

The bill provides nothing for traveling expenses of these ministers, and leaves their postage, telegraphing, &c., to be paid by them. Ecuador, population more than a million; Venezuela, population about 2,000,000; La Guayra, 7,000; Puerto Cabello, 9,000; Maracaibo, 21,000, have important trade relations with United States. Colombia, about three millions; Panama, $111,000; Aspinwall, $25,000; Bogota, $50,000, &c. Peru, population about 2,500,000; Callao, 34,000; Iquique, feed consulate, population 16,000; exports about $3,000,000 to United States; trade with United States principally in nitrates. Brazil, population about 10,000,000; Bahia, 129,000; Pará, 35,000; Pernambuco, 841,000; Rio Grande do Sul, 20,000; Rio de Janeiro, 300,000; Santos, 9,800; large exports to the United States; all should have large imports from the United States. Chili, population, 2,075,000; Valparaiso, 97,000; Talcahuano, 2,400. Argentine Republic, population about 2,000,000; Buenos Ayres, about 180,000. The exports from Buenos Ayres alone to the United States amounted last year to about $3,000,000. We should supply them with manufactured articles. Gautemala, population 1,190; but one full consulate, that an unsalaried one, at Gautemala City, the population of which is 45,000; Honduras, population 350,000; Salvador, population 435,000. The above figures are approximate but substantially correct; population probably larger than stated. The salary of $1,500 for a consul inadequate at most any post; it is the salary of a copying clerk, not that of a man familiar with commercial and international law and intrusted with large responsibility.

JOHN DAVIS.

[During the reading of the above telegram Mr. KING's time having expired, Mr. BLANCHARD took the floor and yielded him his time.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask to be recognized, and will yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, when I came to the clause in this bill which appropriates $15,500 for this purpose I really did not think the committee were in earnest. The impression made on my mind was that if they were in earnest it was intended to strike the service down, and if that were the case I wondered why the committee did not throw this whole appropriation out.

Now, we have heard a great deal of brass buttons and toadyism. It may all be true; if it is, no one will condemn it more severely than myself. I believe in the simple austerity of the American character, and if American ministers abroad have in any way aped the old forms of effete civilizations, of tyranny, and white slavery, I for one would be for taking from the guilty one the authority this Government has invested him with. What we want, sir, is commerce. Nations advance in the lines either of religious civilization or military civilization or the civilization of commerce. We have chosen the latter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BURNES. The other side have occupied fifteen minutes on this proposition; and as the whole subject was once discussed, but on another amendment, I now move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that is not necessary, as the committee will agree by unanimous consent to close debate at this time.

Mr. BURNES. If that be the agreement I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and debate is closed on the pending amendment.

Mr. KING's amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For printing and distributing the publications by the Department of State of the consular and other commercial reports, including circular letters to chambers of commerce, $20,000: Provided, That no part of such reports discussing partisan, political, religious, or mere moral questions shall be published.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to explain exactly what that proviso means. For the present I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BURNES. I will explain to my friend from Iowa that this bill appropriates the same amount which was appropriated last year for this purpose.

Mr. KASSON. I understand that, but what is meant by the limitation in the proviso that no part of such reports discussing partisan, political, religious, or mere moral questions shall be published.

Mr. BURNES. That limitation has been attached to the appropriation for the reason that we will have a great many more copies for distribution among our constituents if we exclude from publication mere essays in consular reports on prohibition, protective tariff, free trade, and every other imaginable question. What we want are facts and not essays on theoretical positions.

Mr. KASSON. I feared that was the intention. I know our consuls give us a great deal of information, which is very interesting to the people, of the condition of countries where they are located. Incidentally they speak of movements involving sometimes religious wars. It adds to the interest and knowledge of our people of what is going on abroad. On the tariff question they are obliged to report under the rules of the Department facts relating to the condition of manufactures, rates of duties, and effects of rates of duties.

Mr. BURNES. We do not object to their reporting facts, but we do object to the publication of labored defenses of one theory or another in reference to political, religious, and moral questions.

Mr. KASSON. It is impossible to separate them. I do not see how it can be done. No one objects, so far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa rises to a point of order, and he will state his point of order.

Mr. KASSON. This is entirely new legislation, not coming within the rule, as I apprehend, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that he has not information before him as to the terms of the present law.

Mr. KASSON. It is merely a law making appropriations for the collection, preparation, and publication of the reports transmitted to this Government from our foreign representatives.

I may be permitted to remark incidentally that it is a law in the preparation of which I took a great deal of interest and urged upon Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, the advisability of frequent bulletins for the information of the country. I was impressed with the importance of obtaining information concerning the business interests, the commerce, tariff, agriculture, and other matters of interest to our people in connection with the countries to which our representatives may be sent, and the law was adopted when that gentleman was in power as head of the Department. I urged upon him, as I have said, the necessity of providing that these reports should be made at frequent intervals, and hence the system of monthly reports was established, which have proved to be of great value—information touching not only the subjects to which I have referred but religious-political movements, as well as facts touching the tariff.

Now, the provision of this bill as it stands here would be a great embarrassment in the preparation of these reports in the matter of determining what comes within the restrictions of this provision and what would be proper under the terms of the law. I hope my friend from Missouri, therefore, will allow these reports to come in as they have been coming, without any restriction upon them which would necessarily involve difficulty in construction and delay in the preparation of the reports. I do not think it is within the rule, sir; but I am looking at the bill without making a special point more than is necessary, believing that a mere statement of the case would induce the gentleman to withdraw it. I reserved, however, the point of order, because I think it subject to it, but for the present will only call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the difficulty I apprehend if this proviso shall stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will recognize the difficulty that the Chair would have in deciding a point of order that is not made.

Mr. KASSON. The point of order is made that this is new legislation which changes existing law. The present law authorizes the transmission of reports embracing statistics of agriculture, commerce, tariff, manufacturing, the effect of local laws upon them, and such matters of general interest, all of which are published now under existing law. This seeks to exclude certain matters now authorized from the reports, and I call the attention of the Chairman to it.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to the publication of all the facts relating to the subject of tariffs of foreign countries or reports which are in any way connected with the commerce, agriculture, or industries of any character or which will probaby enable us to secure commerce between ourselves and such countries. But it has come to the notice of the Committee on Appropriations that a portion of these gentlemen have entered upon a discussion of subjects that do not pertain, as we think, to the duties of their offices or come within the purposes for which that law was passed. Such, for instance, I might cite an essay on temperance, which has been forwarded; another furnishes an essay upon protection and free trade, and others have been sent upon these and kindred subjects.

The Committee on Appropriations do not desire in any manner to restrict the accumulation of statistics or the publication of facts connected with subjects of general interest in this country; but we think it unwise to permit the funds appropriated for the purpose of gathering statistics of general interest to the public to be used in the preparation of essays on the subject of protection or free trade, or the subject of temperance or on religious subjects. That is the reason the restriction was made.

The effect will be, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, to give for the sum of money appropriated in this bill, which is the same as that of last year, a larger number of these publications that would be of general interest.

Mr. KASSON. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania agree with me as to the difficulty that would arise in the construction of the language used here:

That no part of such reports discussing partisan, political, religious, or mere moral questions shall be published.

Mr. RANDALL. The word "partisan," I think, would so confine the language used there as that they might discuss a question of great public policy of the Government perhaps, but not in its relation to this country as far as affects our—I hardly like to call that a local question [laughter]—upon our tariff or duties here.

Mr. KASSON. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania will see that this provision added to this section of the bill would be a very difficult one to construe. What would come within its restrictions in the reports already submitted?

Mr. RANDALL. A statement of all of the facts in connection with such subjects is what we desire to obtain, and the money is given for that purpose. But it occurred to the committee that we could enlarge the facts as far as they relate to commerce and the general trade of the countries—which are the main points we desired to reach—better by a provision of this character than otherwise, because we do not desire mere essays upon subjects not of direct or general interest.

Mr. REED. The difficulty, though, would be in the construction of it.

Mr. KASSON. It would be in my judgment exceedingly impracticable to carry into execution. It imposes limitations upon the present law which will be difficult to enforce. It would create confusion in these reports as to discriminating between what they are authorized to publish and what they are not authorized under this provision to report.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania in what respect, if any, the consuls have exceeded the duties imposed upon them by section 1752 of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. RANDALL. Read the statutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is in the following words:

SEC. 1752. The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations, and make and issue such orders and instructions, not inconsistent with the Constitution or any law of the United States, in relation to the duties of all diplomatic and consular officers, the transaction of their business, the rendering of accounts and returns, the payment of compensation, the safe-keeping of the archives and public property in the hands of all such officers, the communication of information, and the procurement and transmission of the products of the arts, sciences, manufactures, agriculture, and commerce, from time to time, as he may think conducive to the public interests. It shall be the duty of all such officers to conform to such regulations, orders, and instructions.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not believe the President has ever given any instructions which would require consular officers to write essays on temperance.

Mr. HISCOCK. The language of the section is:

The communication of information and the procurement and transmission of the products of the arts, sciences, manufactures, agriculture, and commerce from time to time as he may think conducive to the public interests.

Mr. KASSON. I will read the last line of the section, because it touches the point of order:

It shall be the duty of all such officers to conform to such regulations, orders, and instructions.

These officers are now executing the instructions they have received. This proviso says they shall not do so, or at least that what they report shall not be published.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to be heard for a moment on the point of order. I understand the proviso is not so much a regulation of what the consuls shall do in making their reports as it is an inhibition against the publication of their reports by the State Department. The consuls will still be at liberty to make such reports as the State Department shall require them to make, or as they may choose to make in the absence of any regulation on the part of the State Department. But I think the clause is subject to the point of order. Under existing laws these consular and other commercial reports may be printed Now, the proviso perhaps may be said to be germane to the paragraph of the bill, but it does not come within the third clause of Rule XXI. Assuming that it is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, the adoption of the proviso will not "retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States," or "by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill."

If this clause should be stricken out on the point of order or otherwise the amount of money would still stand as covered by the bill and the expenditure would be exactly the same, so that it does not come within either of these clauses that I have referred to in paragraph 3 of Rule XXI. It is unquestionably new legislation. It is not merely the changing of existing law, but it is absolutely new legislation, and it is upon an appropriation bill, and therefore subject to the point of order, as I understand. Everything that changes existing law is entirely new legislation. This can not come within any one of the clauses I have read from the rule, and hence I think the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa is well taken. I should not insist upon it if I did not think the proviso in the bill was one that was likely to lead to a great deal of trouble and do no good.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Ohio if the proviso will not retrench expenditures?

Mr. KEIFER. I shall be glad if the gentleman from Illinois will state how it will do so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It will reduce the size of the communications, and economize the time of the consuls in various ways.

Mr. KEIFER. But the proviso does not seek to regulate the consuls in making their reports. It regulates only what shall be the character of the reports published by the State Department.

Mr. KASSON. The books published may be still as large.

Mr. BURNES. The proviso limits the expenditure.

Mr. KEIFER. The proviso does not limit the expenditure. The $20,000 are still appropriated.

Mr. BURNES. But $15,000 may be sufficient to publish these reports if all this is taken away from them.

Mr. KEIFER. But the gentleman from Missouri gives $20,000 absolutely for the purposes of this expenditure. The same amount is appropriated and left to be expended, and as has been said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON], the volume may be just as large, because if the consuls know remarks on these matters will not be published they will write at greater length on other subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order, as well as the Chair understands it, is not well taken. If the printing and circulating of certain documents cost anything, the proviso that certain reports shall not be printed for distribution would seem to decrease expenditure. Nor is the Chair advised that there is any existing law which this in any way changes. The point of order is, therefore, overruled.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to offer a small amendment. In line 350 the word "mere," before the word "moral," if grammatical, is vague, uncertain, and apparently unnecessary. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not consider the suggestion as disrespectful.

Mr. BURNES. Not at all, sir.

Mr. PARKER. Then I move to amend by striking out the word "mere."

Mr. KASSON. I think it will be better to move to strike out the whole proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question would first be on the amendment to perfect the text. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his amendment?

Mr. PARKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURNES. It is a sort of qualification of the word "moral;" but I do not care about the word being retained.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I really do not think it is wise for us to prohibit all allusions to moral and religious questions in these reports. Such allusions doubtless occur incidentally, and I suppose these matters are never discussed in an obnoxious sense. I move to strike out the proviso.

The question being taken on Mr. KASSON'S motion, there were—ayes 36, noes 50.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. We have got it now so that these consuls shall not say anything that is religious or moral. I think we ought to prohibit them from saying anything irreligious or immoral. [Laughter.] I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri an amendment to that effect.

Mr. REED. Oh! that is not necessary.

Mr. BURNES. I think, if insisted upon, it might be a very appropriate amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following paragraph:

For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of ministers and consuls of the United States to their former homes in this country for interment, where such ministers or consuls may die abroad while in discharge of their official duties, $10,000.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

I take it the committee means this as a grim joke to provide for dead men, when they do not provide for the living. Still I can scarcely believe the majority of this House mean to perpetrate a practical joke on the country in the form of a measure that carries nothing in it for the maintenance of the consular service to which we must look for the advancement of our commercial relations with the world. Why, sir, immediately below the city of New Orleans there are the South American and Central American States and the islands of the Caribbean that have a foreign commerce nearly as large as the foreign commerce of this great Republic, and we do not receive 1 per cent. of it. And why? It is because the people of those various countries do not actually know us. The English, the Germans, the French have their ministers and consuls there, and those consuls are the instruments by which the commerce of those several countries has been directed to England and to Europe. Consuls are but the advanced guard of commerce, the skirmish line; or, to speak in more peaceful phrase, they are the pioneers of commerce. Yet you propose to compel our consuls in those countries to return home or remain out there and starve. I do not believe that this side of the House is conscious of the injustice it is perpetrating in this regard at this time.

Yesterday, at the very closing hour of the day's session, by unanimous consent, a measure was passed by this House loaning $1,000,000 to the Cotton Centennial Exposition to be held at the city of New Orleans. Was that for a mere show? No, sir; it was in serious earnestness, for the purpose of promoting the commerce of this great country. Yet we are now told that the very countries which we expect to send articles to be displayed at this world's fair, the greatest ever held on this continent, and to which we should look for enlarging our commercial advantages, are to have no agents from us among them as our official representatives; for such practically must be the result of passing this bill in its present form.

The question was taken upon the motion to strike out by a viva voce vote, and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING. I call for a division. I want to see how many there are here who are willing to vote for a joke like this.

Mr. REED. I think we should do something for the dead, if we do not do anything for the living.

The question was again taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 22, noes 55.

So (no further count being called for) the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURNES. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest to the gentleman that he had better move to lay the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House, and allow the Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BURNES. I will accept the suggestion, and modify my motion accordingly.

The motion as modified was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The next appropriation bill upon the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6861) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to make a very brief statement relative to this bill. It is very similar to the Army appropriation bill passed last year, with very little change. This bill appropriates for the support of the Army for the next fiscal year $24,244,250. The bill of last year appropriated the sum of $24,682,250. The difference between the amount appropriated by the bill under consideration and the amount appropriated by the bill for the present fiscal year is $437,800.

Some new legislation is proposed in this bill, but that new legislation is in the interest of economy and at the same time to make the Army more efficient. I can also say there is no new legislation in this bill except what has been recommended by those officers having charge of the departments of the Army affected by the proposed changes. We also feel authorized to say that in the main the officers of the Army agree to the changes which are proposed.

Nearly one-half of the amount appropriated by this bill is under the head of the Pay Department, $11,935,000. This bill proposes a slight change of the law in regard to the Pay Department, that hereafter any paymaster of the rank of major who has served in the United States Army as a commissioned officer may, upon his own application, or by direction of the President, be placed on the retired-list of the Army until the Pay Department shall be reduced to twenty-eight members. That is about all the change proposed in the law relating to the Pay Department.

There is a change of law proposed in relation to the Quartermaster's Department. The number of draught animals is reduced to 6,000, and the purchase of supplies is hereafter to be made by contract. The Secretary of War is also authorized to appoint one hundred quartermaster-sergeants from the enlisted men of the Army whose character and education shall fit them to take charge of public property and to act as clerks and assistants to post and other quartermasters.

It has been the custom heretofore to appropriate about $200,000 annually to the Quartermaster's Department for the purchase of cavalry horses, those horses to be purchased in open market. Hereafter such purchases are to be made by contract.

There is also another change in the Quartermaster's Department relative to the extra-duty pay of enlisted men. The law as it now stands allows for 35 cents a day, and the change of law here proposed will allow 50 cents a day for mechanics, artisans, and school-teachers, and 35 cents a day to other extra-duty men who now receive 20 cents a day.

Several other changes are proposed, and when the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule shall be reached, if any gentleman desires explanation of them the committee will be pleased to give such information as we have. I have nothing more to say, I believe, in explanation of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to dwell at any length upon the provisions of the pending bill. I am pleased to find in this measure very little to criticise. There are a few new features, which in my judgment are wisely proposed, and so far as I know no objection is made to them by any of the officers of the Government. I have heard none from the War Department. With one possible exception, to which I will refer before I am through, I understand the Appropriations Committee, with additional light and upon further reflection, agrees to a change.

This bill proposes to appropriate $24,244,450 for the support of the Army. The Army of the United States, in proportion to the number of our people and in proportion to the grave duties and responsibilities falling upon it, is a very small one. I am glad to say that I think it is sufficient for the present, taking the condition of the whole country into consideration.

But I have always been of the opinion that the rank and file of the Army should be increased. I think the time is not far distant when it will be found wise and necessary to increase it; in other words, it will be found very important to this Government to be prepared in a more essential sense than it is for war. When I speak of preparation for war I do not mean that we are now liable to have war, but I mean that by proper preparation we may prevent war.

We fall into the idea that we are living in a civilized age—in a period of history when wars are not very frequent. Yet it is worth remembering that our annals are in no small degree bloody. The policy originally inaugurated by this Government, when it was called into being among the nations of the earth—the policy consistently and persistently pursued by our first President, George Washington, and by all the leading statesmen of our country, that we should keep out of foreign complications, has undoubtedly been wise and should be adhered to throughout our history. But, notwithstanding this, it is a startling fact that, excluding all Indian wars, this country, during the first hundred years of its existence, has been at war on the average one year in six.

Now, I am not of those who believe in wars; but I believe our policy should be to pursue such a course as will prevent war. During the last few years I have noticed, in connection with our Indian wars, that they have always been brought about at such exposed points upon our frontier as led the Indians to believe they could with some success, at least for a time, wage a war upon our settlements. I cite this simply as an evidence that it is important we should be prepared to defend ourselves as a nation at all times and at every exposed point.

I do not say this in criticism of the present bill. This bill proposes to keep up the organization of the Army as it has been for a number of years, and I think as fully as it was provided for in the last and preceding Congresses.

Under existing law the organization of the Army can only embrace 25,000 enlisted men. The active force of our Army (the General of the Army being now retired) includes one Lieutenant-General, three major-generals, six brigadier-generals, and ten officers with the rank of brigadier-general at the heads of different departments, such as the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, the Pay, Engineer, Ordnance, Judge-Advocate-General's, Medical, Subsistence, and Quartermaster's Departments, also the Signal Corps, making sixteen in all. The present organization of the Army under existing law, which this bill does not propose to change, would make it possible to have in the service, excluding the officers and cadets at the Military Academy, 27,660. The total number in the Army, according to the report of June 30, 1883, was 25,478, including officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers. This number it is not proposed to interfere with.

Turning aside a little and referring to the peculiar organization of the Army, which is commonly understood to be an army of officers, made up of men who are graduates of the Military Acadamy, which has been in existence since the year 1800 I believe, I wish to say that while we have and have had many distinguished officers who have been graduates of the Military Acadamy, the number of West Point graduates in our Army is much smaller than the number of those from civil life.

By the latest report I have the total number of officers in the Army was 2,130, of which number nine hundred and twenty-four were graduates of the Military Academy, and 1,206 non-graduates. In other words, 1,206 of our commissioned officers have been selected from civil life. In another form of statement, only about three out of seven of our officers are graduates of the Military Academy. Of the officers upon the retired-list—four hundred and twenty-seven in all—only one hundred and twenty-eight are graduates of the Military Academy, while two hundred and ninety-nine were selected from civil life. Many of them, it is true, came in through their service in the late war.

The Army consists of ten regiments of cavalry, each regiment composed under present regulations of forty-three officers, one hundred and ninety-seven non-commissioned officers, and six hundred private soldiers, the total for a complete cavalry regiment under the present organization being eight hundred and forty. Of artillery there are five regiments, each regiment embracing fifty-six officers, one hundred and seventy-seven non-commissioned officers, and three hundred and fifty-eight private soldiers, making five hundred and ninety-one. There are twenty-five infantry regiments, there being in each of these regiments thirty-five officers, one hundred and forty-five non-commissioned officers, and three hundred and sixty private soldiers. These numbers have been fixed in order to carry out the present policy of limiting the Army in its rank and file to twenty-five thousand men. There are of course unattached non-commissioned officers, enlisted men, and Indian scouts; also officers and cadets of the Military Academy.

This is all I desire to say on the subject of the organization of the Army, except that our Army in its organization, in its appointments, in its able and distinguished officers, compares favorably with any army of the civilized world.

In my judgment it is the best army for its size that was ever organized.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] who has charge of this bill on the floor has called attention to a few of its new provisions which are of a permanent character. The proposition to reduce by retiring paymasters of the rank of major I think is a wise one, and I believe we shall have, when these officers are cut down to the number limited by the bill, sufficient, to wit, twenty-five paymasters with the rank of major. This does not affect the Paymaster-General nor the two assistant paymasters-general, but simply reduces the total number of officers in that department to twenty-eight.

One provision of the bill which is new is this: that hereafter the sales of subsistence supplies to officers and enlisted men shall be made at cost price only. It is suggested that is not new. It is new at least at present. At one time it was the policy to sell to officers and enlisted men entitled to purchase subsistence supplies at cost. Under the present law and regulations they are required to pay 10 per cent. above cost. This clause fixes the mode of determining the cost and fixes it safely, so the Government loses nothing and does not speculate upon officers and enlisted men. There is also a wise provision as to fuel for officers serving in the West, where fuel is scarce and dear.

The provision of the bill for the reduction of the large number of draught animals, such as mules and horses, is a wise one. Formerly we had to draw Government supplies over long distance to remote posts on the frontier. Now the railroad has penetrated nearer to the posts and in many instances absolutely to the post where supplies are to be taken, and the number of draught animals can properly be reduced. And so far as the reduction is made here it is made with the express consent of the Quartermaster-General of the Army and the other officers in the War Department concerned in it.

There is a provision in the bill for the transportation of stores which goes to this extent, that wherever private parties are employed in the transportation of stores for the Army it shall be done by contract after due legal advertisement. Under army regulations there is a provision fixing what is due legal advertisement. Private parties can not make contracts for transportation of stores if this should become the law without doing it in competition with others after due notice given in the way provided by army regulations.

The provision of the bill authorizing appointments, upon recommendation of the Quartermaster-General, of post quartermaster-sergeants is a new one. This clause authorizes not to exceed one hundred post quartermaster-sergeants. There are I believe one hundred and fourteen army posts. The bill does not authorize the appointing of post quartermaster-sergeants for each post. It was believed by the Quartermaster-General and others who were consulted that one hundred would be the maximum that would be needed. These men are to be selected from those who serve four years in the Army. They are to be selected on proper examination and appointed by the Secretary of War upon proper recommendation of the Quartermaster-General. Their appointment will not increase the number of the Army at all. They belong to the Army establishment and are within the limitations of the number which shall constitute the Army. They are to perform the duties of clerks and assistants to post and other quartermasters. They are to be competent persons, and in a measure it is a reward for good conduct. It is a promotion of great value to these persons.

It is believed by the committee this will reduce the expenditures of the Government. It is believed you can cut down the amount appropriated for clerk-hire. The appropriation for clerk-hire (and we pay $75 to $150 per month to each one) is cut down by this bill. We cut down the former appropriation for clerk-hire $55,000, and the increase in pay for these post quartermaster-sergeants is not more than $35,000. So there will be a saving in that respect. It was thought wise to increase the amount to be paid to artisans, mechanics, and school-teachers from 35 to 50 cents, and for clerks, teamsters, and laborers from 20 to 35 cents for extra duty. It often happens that men detailed from the Army, skilled mechanics or artisans, or other persons competent to do skilled work and to perform important duties such as may be connected with the erection of barracks and other public buildings, are required to work alongside of civilians who get in the West $2.50, and many more than that, per day.

We pay detailed men $13 per month, and under existing law only pay them 35 cents a day for the same amount of work the civilian working alongside of them gets as high as $2.50 per day for. This has often led to dissatisfaction and sometimes to desertions. It is believed by Army officers and the Committee on Appropriations necessary to increase it from 35 to 50 cents. I do not think there was any exception to the belief that it would be wise to add a little to this extra-duty pay for this class of persons. As I have said, it was therefore increased from 35 to 50 cents a day. In the other class the increase was from 20 to 35 cents a day. It is a small increase, but a valuable one.

There is a provision in this bill that requires the Quartermaster-General and officers acting under his instructions, wherever stationed, to receive, transport, and be responsible for all property turned over to them or any one of them by the officers or agents of any Government survey for transmission to the National Museum, or to the civil or naval Departments of the Government in Washington or elsewhere, and under the regulations governing the transportation of army supplies. This is simply a convenience by utilizing army transportation where there are officers of the Quartermaster's Department stationed who are prepared to look after the transportation of such articles. It was thought well to put in this clause, so that the agents or officers of the Government surveys should have transported whatever valuable specimens or articles they discover to the city of Washington, and the cost is to be repaid to the Quartermaster-General's Department. So that it is not a tax upon that department at all, but only a convenience to those persons who may discover such things in our Western Territories in securing the transmission of them to Washington.

I desire to call attention to another matter. There is a provision in this bill requiring that all officers who are assigned to duty in the Commissary or Quartermaster's Departments, and who are authorized to disburse public moneys, shall be required to give bonds in such sums as may be fixed by the Secretary of War. At a proper time, if some other person does not make a motion to that effect or a point of order against that provision of the bill, I shall try to have this clause stricken from the bill. I do not believe it to be a wise provision, although I say that I am quite as much responsible for its being now in the bill as any other person connected with the Committee on Appropriations. I speak of it, therefore, not for any purpose of criticising the action of the committee for having put it in. I know as a matter of fact that in the Treasury Department, and especially in the Third Auditor's Office, there has been frequent complaint or a great deal of complaint about paying over money to non-bonded officers. But, in my judgment, this provision if retained in this bill will only embarrass the service by requiring captains and lieutenants and others who may be assigned to the duty of paying out money in the Army to give bond for the faithful performance of that service and the execution of the trust. They ought not to be required to do so because of the difficulty of complying with the requirements, and they often have but small sums of money to disburse, and there has been so far but little loss occasioned by their handling public funds.

There has been but one recent instance that I know of which was cited of an officer of the Army—and it should be stated to the credit of the Army—who without law proved to be a defaulter, and in that case the sum was not large, while the circumstances leading to his fleeing the country are suggested to have arisen from causes not relating to his defalcation but from other complications that he did not desire to meet and not connected in any manner with his service in the Army. I do not believe for my part that it is practicable to require lieutenants—for instance, upon the frontier—who are by their superior officers assigned to the duty of handling public funds or distributing moneys in small amounts, to give bond.

They are often far away from their friends and from all who know anything about them and who would be able to go upon their bond, and consequently they would be compelled to rely upon their fellow-officers. It would be exceedingly embarrassing in most cases to compel them to have to appeal to their associates to go upon their bonds. I think there is no danger which warrants us in departing from a rule which has been unobjectionable in the past, and I think we may safely adhere to what has been the practice of the Government ever since there was an army. Some officers are bonded officers, of course, in the very nature of things; but there are many officers assigned to duty who are not required to give bond. I think that this clause is entirely unnecessary, and unless we come to a point where we propose by legislation to require all officers who disburse public moneys to be bonded officers, we should not make officers assigned to duty in the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments exceptional cases.

Before this Congress adjourns we may pass a bill, the river and harbor bill, which will provide for an appropriation of about $12,000,000, all of which will have to be disbursed by our engineer officers of the Army and without bond under the present state of the law. We have but little money comparatively disbursed through the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments that comes into the hands of non-bonded officers. I hope this clause will be stricken out, and I think the committee will agree with me upon that point. We may with great security rely upon the integrity and high honor of the commissioned officers of the United States Army.

There is another provision with reference to the Medical Department intended to settle the rank in accordance with the date of commission or appointment, which I shall speak of at the time when we reach that part of the bill if question is made upon it. The provision is not new, but necessary only to make clear what I think is the present law on a fair construction.

Now, begging the pardon of the committee for taking up so much of its time, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FORNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed, and that we proceed to consider the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, $110,000. And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of 25,000 enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital-stewards; and thereafter there shall be no more than 25,000 enlisted men in the Army at any one time, unless otherwise authorized by law.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to offer a proviso to this clause amending section 1119 of the Revised Statutes, to provide that the enlistments hereafter shall be for a term of three years.

Mr. KEIFER. I reserve the point of order upon that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 16 add:

"Provided, That section 1119 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read 'All enlistments in the Army shall be for three years.'"

Mr. FORNEY. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. While insisting on the point of order, I have no objection to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] being heard.

Mr. STEELE. What is the point of order?

Mr. FORNEY. The point of order I make is that the amendment changes existing law and is not in the direction of economy.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to be heard on the point of order. Under the present law the enlistments are for five years. As a result of that, about one-fifth of the Army desert every year. Boys induced to leave their homes and enlist go out to the frontier and find the new situation different from what they expect, and the result is that, having five years before them, they desert and return to their homes. This increases the expense by the necessity of having men to enlist to take their places. I believe it would be in the direction of economy to have the enlistments take place for three years, because men will stay the three years out in four cases out of five, when they would not stay their time out in three cases out of five when the enlistment is for five years.

I think it would be in the line of economy in another direction. Where men have staid as long as three years in the Army more of them will be in the service at the end of the term and more will be disposed to re-enlist, so that the length of service will be greater for the soldiers generally than if you leave the term of enlistment at five years as it now is.

I have been out on the plains myself, and I talked to many of the officers last fall on this subject, and I find it is the universal opinion among the officers that it would be in the direction of economy if you had the term of service three years instead of five.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it is very obvious the point of order is well taken. It would require a very strained argument indeed to work out the theory of the gentleman from Indiana; that is, that this would reduce expenditures to the Government. Certainly it would require more frequent enlistment, and it is always expensive to the Government to repeat the enlistment and the mustering-out, the transportation to the field, and the transportation home when the men are mustered out.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman not know there are a great many more desertions when the term is five years than there would be if it were only three years?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know that to be the fact. The term has always been five years. And I find on examination of this question of desertion that much of it is on the part of men who enlist in the Army under peculiar circumstances. A large percentage of those who enlist, according to the statement in the Adjutant-General's report, are men who want to go West. They go as far as you take them, which they would do if enlisted for three years, the same as when enlisted for five; and then when they get West they desert. There are other causes, doubtless, for desertion. But I submit you can not decide the point of order on the proportion of what would be the number of deserters with a term of enlistment of three years as compared with a term of enlistment of five years. And on the face of the proposition it certainly does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is clear that the amendment changes existing law. It is equally clear that it does not retrench expenditures; and therefore it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Pay Department:

For pay of the Army: For one Lieutenant-General; three major-generals; fifteen brigadier-generals; twenty-three aids-de-camp, in addition to pay in the line; one military secretary, in addition to pay in the line; sixty-six colonels; eighty-five lieutenant-colonels; two hundred and forty-one majors; three hundred and eleven captains (mounted); three hundred and one captains (not mounted); thirty-four chaplains; fourteen storekeepers; forty adjutants; forty regimental quartermasters; adjutant and quartermaster of Engineer Battalion, in addition to pay in the line; two hundred and eighteen first lieutenants (mounted); three hundred and fifty first lieutenants (not mounted); one hundred and forty-five second lieutenants (mounted); three hundred second lieutenants (not mounted); one hundred and eighty acting commissaries of subsistence, in addition to pay in line; officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington; officer in command of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $1,000; officers of foot regiments while on duty which requires them to be mounted; additional pay to officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay; pay to enlisted men for length of service, payable with their current monthly pay; retired officers; for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1885, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act; enlisted men of all grades, not exceeding 25,000 men; the allowances for travel, retained pay, and clothing not drawn, payable to enlisted men on discharge; two retired ordnance-sergeants; and for interest on deposits of enlisted men; for mileage of officers of the Army for travel, over shortest usually traveled routes, not to exceed $160,000; for miscellaneous expenses, to wit: Hire of not exceeding seventy-five contract surgeons and one hundred and sixty hospital matrons; extra-duty pay to enlisted men for service in hospitals; pay of fifty paymasters' clerks, at the rate of $1,400 each per annum, and fourteen veterinary surgeons; hire of paymasters' messengers not to exceed $15,000; post quartermaster-sergeants; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; compensation of citizen clerks and witnesses attending upon courts-martial, military commissions, and courts of inquiry; for reimbursement of traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks actually paid; and for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers on duty without troops at places where there are no public quarters; in all, $11,935,000: Provided, That hereafter any paymaster of the rank of major who has served twenty years in the United States Army as a commissioned officer may, upon his own application or by direction of the President, be placed upon the retired-list of the Army, until the Pay Department shall be reduced to twenty-eight members, as follows: One Paymaster-General, with the rank of brigadier-general; one assistant paymaster-general, with the rank of colonel; one deputy paymaster-general, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and twenty-five paymasters, with the rank of major; and no more appointments of paymasters shall be made in the Pay Department until the number shall be reduced below twenty-five majors, and thereafter the number of officers in the Pay Department shall not exceed twenty-eight officers.

Mr. FORNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 41, before the word "officer," insert the words "additional pay to;" so that it will read "additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in Washington."

And in line 43, before the word "officers," insert the words "additional pay to;" so that it will read "additional pay to officers of foot regiments while on duty which requires them to be mounted."

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the amendment; but I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question in that connection. As I understand, it is proposed to give additional pay to the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds in Washington?

Mr. FORNEY. The law already provides for it. The amount is $1,000.

Mr. KEIFER. Immediately after that line is this one:

Officer in command of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $1,000.

Is that amount meant to apply to the officer mentioned above?

Mr. FORNEY. The committee have instructed me to move to strike that out. I will do so by a subsequent amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to the amendment at present proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 42 and 43 strike out the words "officer in command of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans."

Mr. FORNEY. I offer that amendment on the ground that we do not know why this officer should have $1,000 extra. He is a United States officer there and receives now, I think, about $3,600. This proposes to give him $1,000 more. I do not know why he should have the additional $1,000.

A MEMBER. What is his rank?

Mr. FORNEY. I believe his rank is that of captain.

Mr. KEIFER. If his rank is that of captain he does not get $3,600, but $1,800, I think.

Mr. FORNEY. He is the captain assigned there and receives whatever is the pay of a captain. I do not know any reason why $1,000 extra should be given him.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman to say that this officer is a captain in rank. I have not had my attention especially called to this, though we went over the matter in considering the bill and it was left in this way. I think it was the subject of some discussion when adopted. This much I am quite confident of, that this $1,000 was appropriated for in previous years.

Mr. FORNEY. It was appropriated for last year only.

Mr. KEIFER. Not until last year?

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. My impression was that this appropriation was made for a number of years past. But if the gentleman has examined as to that point, that terminates the controversy.

Mr. FORNEY. I understand it was adopted by a Senate amendment last year and we concurred in the Senate amendment. If any good reason can be given why this officer should have the $1,000 additional, I am willing for my part that he should have it.

Mr. KEIFER. I know that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] is very fair and liberal and always willing to do whatever is right, and therefore there can not be any controversy with him on this matter, certainly not on any partisan ground.

This appropriation of an additional thousand dollars was in the bill of last year. I know that the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., is the only one in the Western portion of our country, the only one where the officer is required to discharge this peculiar kind of service—a service that is not only of a responsible character, but one entirely unusual and exceptional in connection with the Army. Doubtless this officer is responsible for a large amount of property and of funds to be disbursed in maintaining the inmates of this military prison.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. In one moment. This officer has very many duties that are entirely outside of the ordinary duties of an officer of the Army. If it be true that this officer is of the rank of captain only, then his pay would be only $2,800 a year even should this provision be left in the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] if the captains who are now forced to go out upon the frontier and endure the hardships and privations there would not prefer to perform this service at Fort Leavenworth without any additional pay?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not answer that question one way or the other; but I doubt very much whether they would prefer this service instead of being with their troops. The War Department has selected a competent and useful man for this place, and there is undoubtedly some good reason for giving him this additional pay.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why not have the reason given? We ought not to make an appropriation on a supposition merely, but the reason for it should be given.

Mr. KEIFER. I have been trying to give it, if the gentleman had listened to what I said.

Mr. STEELE. I think this additional pay was given upon the recommendation of the board of officers who visit that institution every year, the board consisting of the Adjutant-General and two other officers of the Army. At the last session of Congress they came before the Military Committee of this House and represented that this officer was peculiarly fitted for this position, and that, while receiving only the pay of a captain, his expenses there at Leavenworth on account of the important position he holds there are very great.

It is said that he is about the only man in the Army—that is the representation of the board—who can take hold of that institution and manage it as successfully as he has managed it. The Committee on Military Affairs unanimously reported in favor of agreeing to the recommendation of the board of visitors to that institution, and the compensation was increased at the last session of Congress by the amount here proposed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What duties did you find he had to perform which justified the giving him this additional pay?

Mr. STEELE. I am only stating the representations made to the Committee on Military Affairs by the board of visitors and others.

Mr. MCMILLIN. They ought to have given reasons for it.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will get the records of the last Congress I have no doubt he will find them minutely given; I am not able to give them now. That institution as now managed is a self-sustaining institution, which it never was under the management of anybody else.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] I desire to say that this military prison is conducted a great deal as many of our State prisons are conducted. This officer has not only charge of a large number of men but has charge of a great amount of material. As the gentleman from Indiana has stated, he is peculiarly fitted for this position.

It was stated at the last session of Congress before the Committee on Military Affairs that this officer was the only man in the service who possessed these special qualifications. The board of visitors not only recommended that his pay should be increased, but they also recommended that his rank should be increased to that of lieutenant-colonel. Upon consultation with the General of the Army at that time, General Sherman, we learned that he did not desire the rank to be increased, stating that it would conflict with the proper discipline, but recommended that the pay of this officer should be increased to that of colonel, saying that there was no colonel in the Army who had greater responsibilities than this officer has.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to say to the Committee of the Whole that I know something personally of this officer and of this prison. This officer was put in command of the prison when it was a great expense to the Government. He is a man peculiarly well qualified for this place—a competent mechanic, as well as a practical business man and an excellent executive officer. Under his administration that prison has grown to its present proportions and is now self-sustaining. It is manufacturing clothing, it is manufacturing boots and shoes, it is manufacturing harness and other equipments and many implements needed in the service. The prisoners there are now made useful while serving out their terms of punishment.

As has been suggested here, it is in consequence of this that the recommendation for additional pay was made. If I remember correctly there are nearly five hundred men confined in that prison. It has grown to be, perhaps, the largest military prison in the country, and it is necessary that a man possessing peculiar qualifications should be continued in charge there.

This man has demonstrated his capacity. He has demonstrated the value of his work by the improvement of discipline, making the establishment, as I have suggested, self-sustaining, and furnishing to the different branches of the service the wearing apparel and equipments necessary for their comfort and efficiency.

It is doubtful whether there is another man in the service who can take this place and accomplish for the Government and for the prisoners as much as this man is accomplishing. For that reason it is very appropriate indeed that this increased compensation should be given him.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FORNEY, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 60, noes 41.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to amend by inserting, in line 69, after the word "paid," the words "by them;" so as to make the clause read "for reimbursement of traveling expenses of paymaster's clerks actually paid by them." This amendment is designed simply to correct an oversight.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I notice that by this paragraph of the bill the Pay Corps is to be reduced to twenty-eight officers in all—one Paymaster-General, with the rank of brigadier-general; one assistant paymaster-general, with the rank of colonel; one deputy paymaster-general, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and twenty-five paymasters, with the rank of major. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it would not be well to reduce the rank of the assistant paymaster-general and the deputy paymaster-general to that of major. In other words, why should the rank be increased——

Mr. FORNEY. We do not increase it; it is the law.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But you have diminished the number of paymasters. Under the present law I believe the number is forty.

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I think the reduction proposed by the committee in this bill is altogether proper. At the beginning of this session I introduced a bill to reduce the Pay Corps——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] propose an amendment?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes, sir. I move to amend by striking out "colonel," in line 80, and inserting "major," and by striking out "lieutenant-colonel," in line 81, and inserting "major." I was about to say——

Mr. KEIFER. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 80, strike out "colonel" and insert "major;" in line 81, strike out "lieutenant-colonel" and insert "major;" so as to read: "One assistant paymaster-general, with the rank of major; one deputy paymaster-general, with the rank of major."

Mr. EATON. What does my friend from Indiana propose to do as to the twenty-five paymasters with the rank of major? Does he leave that provision stand?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I was intending to suggest a reduction of those twenty-five paymasters to the rank of captain.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope my friend will not do that.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I make a point of order on the proposed amendment that it changes the present law without reducing expenditures.

Mr. FORNEY. I do not think we ought to go into this matter at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. What has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to say upon the point of order?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LYMAN. I renew it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. What is the point of order?

Mr. LYMAN. The amendment changes existing law, as I understand.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It does change existing law, but it is in the direction of economy. It reduces the compensation of these officers to that belonging to the rank of major. I await the decision of the Chair upon the point of order.

Mr. LYMAN. I withdraw the point.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I was about to say that at the beginning of this session I introduced a bill reducing the Pay Corps in number and rank, I believe, as provided in this bill. Since that time I have had a conference with the Paymaster-General, who believes in the first place that the Pay Corps might, without affecting its efficiency, be reduced to twenty-five officers instead of twenty-eight, as here proposed. I understood him also to say that there might with propriety be a reduction in the rank of the paymasters. With what I know of the Pay Corps and the duties it has to perform I see no reason why there should be any additional rank allowed to the assistant paymaster-general and the deputy paymaster-general. Their duties are not so onerous nor their responsibilities so great as those of a paymaster who goes to the field and distributes the money among the troops. I simply make these remarks by way of suggestion.

Before the war, if I am correctly advised, the members of the Pay Corps ranked only as captains mounted, receiving as compensation about $2,000 a year. I think it is well known that the paymasters' clerks do the principal part of the business—almost everything except assuming the responsibility.

Mr. FORNEY. This is a matter which ought to be considered and reported upon by the Committee on Military Affairs, which properly has charge of the subject. The Committee on Appropriations simply reports the appropriations.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My object is attained in having called attention to this matter. I am glad that the Committee on Appropriations has decided to reduce the Pay Corps. A short time ago this corps numbered fifty-five. A reduction to twenty-eight brings it to something like working order.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEELE. In line 84 I move to strike out the word "below" and insert the word "to;" so that it will read:

And no more appointments of paymasters shall be made in the Pay Department until the number shall be reduced to twenty-five majors, and thereafter the number of officers in the Pay Department shall not exceed twenty-eight officers.

I also move the following proviso——

Mr. KEIFER. Let us dispose of one at a time. I think the gentleman's amendment is based on a misapprehension.

Mr. STEELE. The amendment provides that no more appointments of paymasters shall be made in the Pay Department until the number shall be reduced to twenty-five majors, and thereafter the number of officers in the Pay Department shall not exceed twenty-eight.

Mr. KEIFER. If amended as proposed we would commence making appointments when we reached twenty-five. The object is to have the number remain at twenty-five.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw my amendment and offer the following:

Mr. KEIFER. The bill is exactly right.

Mr. RANDALL. The language is exactly right.

Mr. STEELE. Read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 86:

"Provided, That the officers retired under the provisions of this act shall be in addition to the number now authorized by law."

Mr. KEIFER. I think that is right.

Mr. STEELE. I hope there will be no objection to it. The law now provides there shall be only four hundred officers on the Army retired-list.

Mr. KEIFER. There are four hundred and thirty-one now.

Mr. STEELE. That is because of special provision. The law fixes the number at four hundred, but special enactments have increased the number to four hundred and thirty-one. You can not place a single one of these officers upon the retired-list until the number is reduced to four hundred.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that is right.

Mr. FORNEY. I make the point of order it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. STEELE. How are you going to carry out the provision of law there shall be four hundred and no more on the retired-list? You say these men shall go on the retired-list. How are you going to get them there? You can not do it without increasing the number beyond four hundred.

Mr. FORNEY. That is a matter for your Committee on Military Affairs to consider.

Mr. STEELE. But you are making the law on this bill.

Mr. FORNEY. The bill is in the line of economy.

Mr. STEELE. This is not in the direction of economy.

Mr. FORNEY. O, yes, it is.

Mr. STEELE. You put them in a position where you can not put them on the retired-list.

Mr. FORNEY. Oh, yes, we can.

Mr. STEELE. By this bill your object is to get them there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist upon his point of order?

Mr. FORNEY. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that amendment should be adopted.

Mr. STEELE. If you wish to get them on the retired-list you can not do so now under the law until after the death of some of those now there.

Mr. FORNEY. It increases the retired-list.

Mr. STEELE. It decreases the active-list, and therefore decreases expenses by 25 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment changes existing law, and does not on its face show affirmatively retrenchment of expenditure. It is therefore ruled out.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to be heard on the point of order. It does decrease expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. STEELE. I do not wish to detain the committee, and therefore will not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence of the Army: For rations for 25,000 enlisted men, 1,505 civil employés, 75 contract surgeons, 160 hospital matrons, 200 military convicts, 1,000 prisoners of war (including such Indian prisoners as are captured but whose subsistence is not otherwise appropriated for by Congress), and for additional half-rations for 120 sergeants and corporals of ordnance, a total of not exceeding 10,220,000 rations, estimated at 20 cents each; for difference between the cost of the ration and commutation thereof at rates prescribed by the Secretary of War for the following enlisted men, namely, those detailed for clerical and messenger duty at headquarters of the Army and at headquarters of divisions, departments, districts, and general recruiting service, and for various duties at military posts and stations, those traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry cooked or travel-rations, and those ordered to participate in department, division, and army rifle-practice; for difference between the cost of the ration and the cost of cooked rations for enlisted men and recruits at recruiting stations; cost in excess of ordinary rations of hot coffee and canned food or travel-ration for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook rations; for subsistence of Indians visiting military posts and of Indians employed without pay as guides and scouts; in all, $1,900,000, of which amount $300,000 shall be available from and after the passage of this act for the purchase of stores necessary to be transported to distant posts in advance of the 30th of June, 1885: Provided, That hereafter all sales of subsistence supplies to officers and enlisted men shall be made at cost price only; and the cost price of each article shall be understood in all cases of such sales to be the invoice price of the last lot of that article received by the officer making the sale prior to the first day of the month in which the sale is made. And not more than $105,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in the Subsistence Department of the Army.

Mr. FORNEY. In line 106, I move to strike out the word "practice" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "competition."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quartermaster's Department: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves for heating and cooking; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank-books, for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Quartermaster's Department, and for printing of division and department orders and reports, $2,900,000: Provided, That hereafter all purchases of regular and miscellaneous supplies for the Army furnished by the Quartermaster's Department for immediate use shall be made by the officers of that department, under direction of the Secretary of War, at the places nearest the points where they are needed, the conditions of cost and quality being equal; but when time shall permit, purchases shall be made at the regularly established depots of the Army; Provided also, That all purchases of said supplies shall be made by contract, after public notice of not less than ten days, for small amounts for immediate use, and of not less than from thirty to sixty days whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the circumstances of the case and conditions of the service shall warrant such extension of time. The award in every case shall be made to the lowest responsible bidder for the best and most suitable article, the right being reserved to reject any and all bids. The Quartermaster-General shall report all purchases of supplies furnished by his department, with their cost price and place of delivery, annually to Congress: Provided further, That in time of peace the number of draught and pack animals in the Quartermaster's Department of the Army shall not exceed 6,000, and that all transportation of stores by private parties for the Army shall be done by contract, after due legal advertisement: Provided also, That fuel in kind may be issued to officers of the Army when on duty at any military post or station west of the Mississippi, not to exceed the allowance fixed by the present regulations of the Army: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint, on the recommendation of the Quartermaster-General, as many post quartermaster-sergeants, not to exceed one hundred, as he may deem necessary for the interests of the service, said sergeants to be selected by examination from the most competent enlisted men of the Army who have served at least four years, and whose character and education shall fit them to take charge of public property and to act as clerks and assistants to post and other quartermasters. Said post quartermaster-sergeants shall, so far as practicable, perform the duties of storekeepers and clerks, in lieu of citizen employés. The pay of post quartermaster-sergeants shall be $40 per month and the allowances of an ordnance-sergeant.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I make the point of order against that paragraph, beginning in line 159, that it is new legislation, and does not decrease expenditure.

Mr. FORNEY. Let us first perfect the section by making a few amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. All right.

Mr. FORNEY. I offer the following amendment in behalf of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 140, after the word "the," insert the words "Pay and;" so that it will read:

"Blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. Also, in line 151, the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "supplies," insert "except in cases of emergencies, which must be at once reported to the Secretary of War for his approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. Again, in line 162.

The Clerk read as follows:

Before the word "Congress" insert the words "Secretary of War for transmission to."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. Again, in line 167, the committee recommend the adoption of this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "advertisement" insert the words "except in case of the storage of goods;" so that it will read:

"And all transportation of stores by private parties for the Army shall be done by contract, after due legal advertisement, except in case of the storage of goods."

Mr. KEIFER. What is the object of that?

Mr. FORNEY. For instance, in cases of hauling goods to the depot to be placed in storage. This is generally but a small item, and to advertise it would cost as much as the service itself is worth.

Mr. KEIFER. Had not the gentleman better make it broader, by covering a single article for instance. It might be that a single article, a box of some kind of supplies, would have to be transported for a long distance to some frontier fort.

Mr. FORNEY. I will state to the gentleman that this meets the approval of the Quartermaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois, as the Chair understands, desires to make a point of order upon this section.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not raise the point of order now because of the amendments which have been made, and which cover substantially the point I had intended to make, and since as amended the section complies with the custom in the department. But I desire to make a motion to strike out that portion of the paragraph as amended, beginning with line 159 and ending with line 162—the following words:

The Quartermaster-General shall report all purchases of supplies furnished by his department, with their cost price and place of delivery, annually to the Secretary of War for transmission to Congress.

My objection to this paragraph is that you will find in this bill on page 9 that the Quartermaster-General is required to report to Congress annually all purchases and contracts for horses and mules and military supplies for the Army purchased by his department.

I have no objection to that. But you find on page 12 of the bill another paragraph providing that hereafter all purchases and contracts of every kind made by the Quartermaster's Department shall be annually reported to Congress. The law provides that these reports shall be made to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War sends them to Congress. Under the provisions of this bill you would require an itemized statement of all purchases made by the quartermasters under contract to be made to the Secretary of War and by him to Congress, which would necessitate a large and bulky volume, covering the cost price of all supplies and of every item purchased by the Department. The several quartermasters making purchases under contract through all parts of the country would have to report to the Quartermaster-General, which reports would be consolidated and laid before the Secretary of War; and I hold that it would be a useless and unnecessary expense to publish all of these items, as this bill contemplates.

Mr. FORNEY. What check can there be upon the quartermaster?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The quartermaster lays a detailed statement of his purchases as derived from the purchasing quartermasters before the Secretary of War; that is provided by the law. The Secretary of War must transmit to Congress his statements covering all of these purchases, but does not enter into the little items of account such as the price of every lariat or picket-pin that he purchases throughout the country, and all of this information being compiled and published as required here would be an unnecessary expense and be of no possible use except possibly in case some investigation is made into the affairs of the department. It is therefore a useless expenditure, and I move to strike out that provision.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental expenses, to wit: For postage; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts; in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, including those employed as clerks and messengers at division and department headquarters; expenses of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escort can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts, or when traveling under orders, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, and guides for the Army; compensation of clerks to officers of the Quartermaster's Department; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and for the following expenditures, required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the trains, to wit, hire of veterinary surgeons, medicine for horses and mules, picket-ropes, and for shoeing the horses and mules; also, generally, the proper and authorized expenses for the movement and operations of the Army not expressly assigned to any other department, $675,000: Provided, That $250,000 of this sum, or so much of it as shall be necessary, shall be set aside for the payment of enlisted men on extra duty at constant labor of more than ten days, at the rate of 50 cents per day for mechanics, artisans, and school-teachers, and 35 cents per day for clerks, teamsters, and laborers.

Mr. FORNEY. By direction of the committee I submit the following verbal amendments: In line 234 strike out the word "more" and in lieu thereof insert the words "not less;" after the word "days," in the same line, insert the words "and such extra-duty pay, hereafter shall be;" and in line 236 strike out the word "and;" and after the word "laborers" insert the words "and others."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing and camp and garrison equipage from the depots of Philadelphia and Jeffersonville to the several posts and Army depots and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery, under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of horses, mules, oxen, and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; pay of enlisted men on extra duty; driving teams or repairing means of transportation; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require it to be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads, and for removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops in the field, $3,000,000: Provided, That the whole number of civilian employés, including agents, superintendents, mechanics, packers, teamsters, trainmasters, &c., paid from this appropriation for transportation, shall not at any one time hereafter exceed 1,000, nor shall any of said employés be graded for salary above fourth-class clerks of the Army Regulations; and the grade of sixth-class clerk in the Quartermaster's Department is hereby abolished: Provided further, That hereafter all purchases of horses, mules, or oxen, wagons, carts, drays, ships and other sea-going vessels, also all other means of transportation, shall be made by the Quartermaster's Department, by contract, after due legal advertisement; and hereafter all purchases and contracts of every kind made by the Quartermaster's Department shall be annually reported to Congress: Provided also, That hereafter the Quartermaster-General and his officers, under his instructions, wherever stationed, shall receive, transport, and be responsible for all property turned over to them, or any one of them, by the officers or agents of any Government survey, for the National Museum, or for the civil or naval Departments of the Government, in Washington or elsewhere, under the regulations governing the transportation of army supplies, the amount paid for such transportation to be refunded or paid by the bureau to which such property or stores pertain.

Mr. FORNEY. There is a mistake which should be corrected in this section. In line 254 the semicolon should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, and for grounds for camp and summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations; for the construction of temporary buildings and stables; for commutation of quarters for general-service men, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $700,000: Provided, That no expenditure exceeding $500 shall be made upon any building or military post without the approval of the Secretary of War for the same, upon detailed estimates of the Quartermaster's Department, and the erection, construction, and repairs of all buildings and other public structures in the Quartermaster's Department shall, so far as may be practicable, be made by contract, after due legal advertisement: Provided further, That not more than $1,500,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employés in the Quartermaster's Department; and that no employé paid therefrom shall receive as salary more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law: And provided further, That the office or employment of forage and wagon master is abolished: And provided further, That hereafter all officers who are assigned to duty in the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments, and who are authorized to disburse public money, shall be required to give bond in such sum as may be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last proviso, beginning with line 338.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the best way is to make the point of order upon it. It is new legislation, and does not reduce expenditures.

Mr. FORNEY. I am in favor of striking out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to striking out?

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order because in the event of a failure of the motion to strike out the words it might then be too late.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. FORNEY. That is all right.

The point of order being sustained, the proviso was stricken out of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For manufacture of arms at national armories, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $50,000 of this amount may be expended by the Secretary of War in the manufacture or purchase of magazine-guns selected by the board of officers heretofore appointed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That not more than $65,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department, in all its branches, shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés in said Department.

Mr. FORNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 441 strike out the word "employés" and insert the word "clerks;" so that it will read:

"Provided, That not more than $65,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department, in all its branches, shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said department.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that intended to limit the payment to clerks alone?

Mr. FORNEY. The word "employés" would embrace the men who are making the arms, and work would have to be stopped in about a month. By inserting the word "clerks" the payments to them are limited to $65,000.

Mr. KEIFER. But should not the proviso extend beyond clerks?

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. I also offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the first proviso of the paragraph, namely, the following:

"Provided, That not more than $50,000 of this amount may be expended by the Secretary of War in the manufacture or purchase of magazine-guns selected by the board of officers heretofore appointed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to hear the gentleman from Alabama upon that amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. The proviso is in the bill, and I was instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to strike it out.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the proviso as to the $50,000 to be expended in the manufacture or purchase of magazine-guns?

Mr. FORNEY. I am following out the instructions of the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. I am willing that proviso should be stricken out.

Mr. EATON. I do not quite understand the proposition of my friend from Alabama. If I understand it, it is to strike out this proviso:

Provided, That not more than $50,000 of this amount may be expended by the Secretary of War in the manufacture or purchase of magazine-guns selected by the board of officers heretofore appointed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FORNEY. Now we propose that the whole amount, $400,000, shall be expended for the manufacture of arms, without this restriction.

Mr. KEIFER. They may take for this purpose whatever amount they choose.

Mr. EATON. In other words, there can be no arms such as those that are made at the national armories which can be purchased under this bill. Is that wise?

Mr. KEIFER. This proviso allows $50,000 to be used for that purpose. If the proviso is stricken out there is no limitation. If it is left in, it is a limitation that $50,000 only may be expended for the purchase of magazine-guns.

Mr. FORNEY. We do not propose to make any guns there ourselves except the guns authorized by law.

Mr. EATON. And you do not propose to purchase any elsewhere?

Mr. RANDALL. Not till they are tested. There are seven hundred guns of the Hotchkiss make.

Mr. FORNEY. I will read the letter received from General Benét, Chief of Ordnance, on that subject, if the gentleman from Connecticut desires it.

Mr. EATON. I had supposed that the Ordnance Department were desirous of purchasing a certain amount of magazine guns that are not made at the national armory.

Mr. FORNEY. That is what we have already done. We have already purchased them. And the Chief of Ordnance says—I will read his letter:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this date, as to the manufacture of arms at the national armory, I have to state as follows:

In the Army appropriation bill approved 6th June, 1872 (volume 17 Statutes at Large, page 261) a board of officers was provided for, to select a breech-loading system for muskets and carbines, which, when adopted, "shall be the only one to be used by the Ordnance Department in the manufacture of muskets and carbines for the military service." The board recommended the Springfield breech-loading system, which was adopted by the Secretary of War. Section 1672 Revised Statutes embodies the above.

In the Army appropriation bill approved February 24, 1881, in the item for manufacture of arms at the national armory, $300,000, it is "Provided, That not more than $50,000 of this amount may be expended by the Secretary of War in the manufacture or purchase of magazine-guns, to be selected by a board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War." On the 21st March, 1881, a board was appointed to meet July 5, 1881, and of which Colonel Brooke, Fifth Infantry, was president, "to examine and consider all the magazine-guns that may be brought before it, and to recommend such (one or more) of these guns as, in its judgment, are suitable for the military service. The board made its report in September, 1882, and recommended three guns—the Lee, the Chaffee-Reece, and the Hotchkiss—as in the opinion of the board "suitable for the military service." The Secretary of War approved of my recommendation that a sufficient number of the three guns be provided for a fair and exhaustive trial in the hands of troops.

In the endeavor to provide these three guns it was found that the Winchester Arms Company had the plant to make the Hotchkiss, and that the Remingtons were prepared to make the Lee, and that the guns could be contracted for at fair prices. This was not so with the Chaffee-Reece; the one before the board had been made by hand, and no private factory had the tools for its manufacture. Examination showed that some unused machines and tools at the National Armory could be utilized, and that the guns could be made there much cheaper than by private parties. As the law above quoted of February 24, 1881, authorized the "manufacture," the Secretary of War approved of my recommendation to have the Chaffee-Reece guns intended for trial made at the Springfield armory. These guns, about seven hundred, will be completed and ready for issue to the troops about the 1st July next, and their merits, and the merits of the Lee and Hotchkiss, as determined by field service, can not be reported on and known for a year or more to come, and therefore the legislative modification of section 1672, Revised Statutes, at this time seems to me premature.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. W. H. FORNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

We have got enough of those guns, and I do not think it necessary to continue this proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. The whole of the $400,000 here will go to the manufacture of Springfield guns.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

United States testing-machine: For caring for, preserving, using, and operating the United States testing-machine at the Watertown arsenal, $10,000: Provided, That the tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes shall be continued during the next fiscal year, and report thereof shall be made to Congress: And provided further, That in making tests for private citizens the officer in charge may require payment in advance, and may use the funds so received in making such private tests, making full report thereof to the Chief of Ordnance; and the Chief of Ordnance shall give attention to such programme of tests as may be submitted by the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the record of such tests shall be furnished said society, to be by them published at their own expense.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask whether it is the purpose of this clause to provide that the officers in charge of the testing-machine shall report to Congress the result of the tests made for private individuals? If so, I do not think that is at all necessary.

Mr. KASSON. It is equally necessary with the other.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question pending before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman can move to strike out that proviso.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to strike out the last word. I made the inquiry with a view to ascertain whether it is the purpose to compile and print the reports of tests made for private individuals.

Mr. RANDALL. If these tests are to be made surely the results ought to be printed, so that all persons interested should have knowledge of the operation of this testing-machine.

Mr. McMILLIN. In that connection I will be pardoned for saying, in order to call the attention of the committee to it for such action as may be deemed proper, that the compensation given to the Government for the use of that machine does not cover such expenses as are required even for the publication of the documents supplied to members.

Mr. RANDALL. If the tests are to go on at all the whole country ought to know what is the result of those tests.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What advantage will it be to the country to know the result of the test in unimportant instances, as, for example, in the construction of a new bridge across the Mississippi River?

Mr. RANDALL. It might be a matter of great importance in regard to the safety of the lives of our citizens.

Mr. McMILLIN. I only desired to call the attention of the committee to the subject. We are not enforcing, with regard to this machine, the law we apply to every other department of the Government—that is, to require that individuals using the Government property shall pay the cost of using and 10 per cent. additional to cover what is supposed to be the wear and tear. We appropriate only $10,000 for preserving and using this machine. The income is merely nominal. It wears out with great rapidity. I think the committee should hereafter, if not now, report some provision requiring parties using the machine to pay for its use on the principle I have stated.

Mr. FORNEY. They pay for the use of it now.

Mr. McMILLIN. They pay merely a nominal sum. And there is a bill now pending to pay a claim of $200,000 to the party who constructed the machine. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a single word. This is a subject upon which various communications have come to me from engineers and others totally disinterested in private enterprises. The only objection I can see to this provision is the small amount appropriated by it.

The persons who have addressed me uniformly say that the safety of life in mass as well as in individuals depends largely upon the information which is gained by the processes of this very testing-machine. They deem it important that all the information possible shall be procured as to the elasticity and durability of the materials employed in the construction of bridges, boilers, and everything pertaining to the industries and interests of the people. They say that the most important results are being gained from the information derived in this way, and that the information, whether it comes from private tests or public tests, is equally important to them. That I imagine is the reason that no distinction is made as to the character of the information to be published. It is not intended to verify this man's manufacture or that, but to verify the durability and trustworthy qualities of the materials which they test.

I assure the Committee of the Whole that in that respect we can not overestimate the important results of this testing-machine. I only regret that the amount of the appropriation is not $30,000 or $40,000 instead of $10,000, for the importance of the matter is inestimable.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that $10,000 is supposed to be the amount necessary to keep this machine in repair. That is the object of this appropriation, and that only.

Mr. KASSON. If that is all, then the amount here named may be enough.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the amount that has been appropriated for several years.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that the Committee of the Whole now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6656) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that we had better not enter upon the consideration of that bill to-day. The yeas and nays must be taken upon the two bills we have already passed in committee, and that will take up all the time that is left.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not designed to call the yeas and nays to-day on either of the other appropriation bills, but simply to report them to the House at, say, a quarter to 5 o'clock, call the previous question on them, and take the yeas and nays on their passage to-morrow morning. For some cause or other there does not appear to be a quorum present just at this time. If there is a quorum, then we can go on with the business this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] that the Committee of the Whole now proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 83; noes 5.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. REED [to Mr. WHITE]. Do not make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point is made that no quorum has voted the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to know why it is necessary to submit to the vote of the Committee of the Whole the question of the consideration of this bill at this time? Is not the District appropriation bill the next appropriation bill in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is; and unless objection be made to it it will be taken up for consideration. But the Chair understood that objection was made, and therefore submitted the question to the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. My suggestion was not in the nature of an objection, but rather an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood there was objection, and the motion having been made, the Chair submitted it to the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. If there was objection to the consideration of the bill, then under the rule the committee should have risen and reported the objection to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all true; the question was submitted to the committee informally.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the Clerk go on with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask whether there is objection to the consideration at this time of the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object. I think we had better go on in the regular way.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the regular way.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The regular way is to dispose of a bill under consideration, regardless of what is going on at the races. If there is not a quorum here there ought to be a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is perfectly regular to lay aside in committee any bill the consideration of which has been completed, and to take up any other bill in its order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will not object if no one else does.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6656) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

Mr. FOLLETT. I ask unanimous consent that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Chairman, the fact that one half of the money expended for the District of Columbia is paid out of the national Treasury, and the other half raised by taxation upon the property, real and personal, in the District, is now well understood by members on this floor. The reason of that rule it is not necessary now to consider. It is the law; and of the expenditures provided for in this bill one half will be paid by the Government of the United States, and the other half will be collected by taxation upon the property of the District.

The bill now before the Committee of the Whole has been prepared with the view of applying the taxation of the District of Columbia and a like amount out of the Treasury of the United States to the expenditures of the District government, to the improvement of the streets and alleys, and to the completion of the sewerage system of this city. By a bill passed in this House on Monday last provision has been made (if that bill should be passed by the other branch of Congress) for the immediate completion of the sewerage system of the District. The necessity for the completion of this sewerage system is well understood by every one having in view the sanitary condition of the city, and I know from personal examination that this system, when carried out, will be complete and will be constructed with a view to permanency.

The flexible appropriation of this bill is the appropriation for the improvement of streets. Whatever could be taken from other objects left so much more for the streets, and whatever was added to the other appropriations necessarily diminished the amount for the improvement of streets.

The government of the District of Columbia, so far as the payment of officers is concerned, as any one who examines this bill and understands the salaries paid in other cities will see, is an economical government. The employés of the fire department, the police department, and in the public schools—the three departments for which the largest appropriations have been made—are all paid salaries which in comparison with those paid in cities of like size in other parts of the country will be found to be low. While these salaries in some instances are not specifically given, in others they are.

Personally I would have liked very much to make an increase, believing an increase should be made in the compensation of some of these employés of the District government, especially the fire department. I have examined this department, having visited all the fire stations, and I believe it to be, from the head to the lowest employé, one of the most complete fire departments to be found in any city of the country. The chief of the department ranks, I know, among the firemen of the country as one of the most skillful and efficient men that can be found in this line of employment in any city.

The privates of this department have heretofore received, and, as the committee have not deemed it advisable in this bill to commence any increase of salaries, will receive under the bill, only $60 per month. I know of no other city of like size in the United States where firemen are not to-day receiving at least $75 per month.

But we have in this bill made a provision for a fireman's relief fund, which has not heretofore been provided for. That is to say, we add, if you please, to that extent to the compensation of the firemen, setting apart $1 per month for the firemen's relief fund. The necessity for such a fund has been made apparent since this session of Congress commenced by the disablement of some two or three of the employés of this department in their efforts to extinguish a fire. One or two men now retained in the department are compensated, not for the services they are rendering, but for the purpose of enabling them to live in the line of duty in which they have been disabled. The committee agree that there ought to be provision made by which a man who has been disabled in the performance of his duty as a fireman can be retired from the service and compensation allowed for his future support. In this I am satisfied the committee will be seconded by Congress, which has recognized for years past that a man who has been disabled in the line of duty, especially in the employment of the Government, should be provided for in some way. The Government of the United States makes such provision by pensions. The government of the District of Columbia has no power to provide in that way; and therefore we have sought to establish a relief fund by which compensation may be paid in such cases.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether this relief fund is to be created by a deduction of $1 a month from the salary of each of these firemen?

Mr. FOLLETT. It is thought that will be sufficient. The money is to be set apart as a trust fund, is to be held by the commissioners of of the District as a trust fund, to be used only for this purpose.

Mr. COBB. Do you increase the pay of the officers?

Mr. FOLLETT. We have increased it just enough to provide for this fund.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman to say that one dollar a month was taken from the allowance of sixty dollars.

Mr. FOLLETT. That was the provision of the bill as originally reported. I ought to say there are some amendments which have been agreed upon by the committee; but to avoid expense the bill has not been reprinted, notice having been given that these amendments will be offered as the bill is considered by paragraphs. The provision to which I have referred for this relief fund does not stand in the printed bill as finally agreed upon by the committee; but an amendment embodying the views of the committee will be offered. The bill as now printed, without raising the compensation of the firemen, provides for a deduction of $1 a month. This the committee on further consideration thought unjust; and therefore we have agreed upon an amendment providing that $1 a month shall be added to the pay for the purpose of being applied to this relief fund.

Mr. BLOUNT. Making the pay actually $61 a month.

Mr. FOLLETT. It will be actually $61 a month.

Mr. EATON. Some of the firemen of the District who have spoken to me in regard to this matter have complained that, according to their understanding of the bill, the privates receiving $60 a month are obliged to pay just as much toward this relief fund as an officer receiving $100 or $120. They have stated further that they have already a relief fund of their own; that they are their own insurers; and that this is a matter which, in their opinion, should properly be left to the firemen themselves.

Mr. BLOUNT. This is a sort of firemen's insurance fund?

Mr. RANDALL. A hospital fund.

Mr. EATON. In my own State this fund is not provided by the public, but the firemen have a fund of their own. I think this is a matter which ought to be examined closely, although the amendment of which my friend from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] speaks may prove to be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. FOLLETT. When the bill comes to be read by paragraphs the amendment will be suggested, and if not complete can be made so. The intention of the committee was that the compensation of these firemen should not be reduced, and at the same time that provision should be made for the fireman's relief fund, so there should be $1 or the equivalent of $1 to each of these firemen appropriated in addition to what was heretofore paid for the fireman's relief fund.

There is another branch of the government of the District, the police department, which has been increased somewhat. We believe the necessities of the growing condition of the city require it should be increased.

We have also provided in this bill for the erection of another fire-station house. There is a large part of the city, the northwestern portion, which is at least a mile to a mile and a half from any fire-engine, the nearest fire-engine to that part of the city being on K street. Another station was needed there in case of a fire in that part of the city. The bill therefore provides for the erection of another fire-station. We have not increased the number of firemen for this new station-house because there are men now in the employ of the Government deemed to be sufficient to man that building when erected.

The educational branch of the city government, one I am satisfied every member of Congress will take special notice of, I am happy to say, not merely from inquiries made by myself, but rather on information I have received from others, is in a good condition. There is a condition of things here I would be glad to see changed in connection with public schools if I thought it prudent or if the committee thought it prudent to do so, and that is they have here two superintendents of public schools, one of them a colored man and the other a white man, one receiving compensation at the rate of $2,750 a year and the other, I believe, at $2,250, or $500 less. I am convinced if we could eliminate entirely all prejudice that one superintendent, one head, would really be better than two. But there are about one-third of the children attending these schools of the colored race and they would not be satisfied, or at least the management of the schools in the city think they would not, unless they had a superintendent of their own color. It is not thought advisable there should be anything tending in the least degree to detract from the efficiency of the common schools of the city and of the District. Yet I believe it is only a question of time when the wisdom of Congress and of the government of the city and District will come to the conclusion that one efficient head is better than two. That time has not yet come, and therefore we have made no recommendation on that point.

The teachers of this city are compensated at a lower rate than in most of the cities of the country. The principal of the high school receives but $1,800 a year. He is a graduate of Harvard College and is thoroughly efficient and competent for the performance of the duties of his position. And I know that the schools of the city in their management and in their efficiency will compare favorably with the schools of any other part of the country.

There is an indebtedness upon the city that requires for the sinking fund and payment of interest over $1,200,000 a year. How this indebtedness arose, what was its origin, is familiar to every member of Congress. The debt exists. The action of this committee, and I believe it will be the action of every Committee on Appropriations, has been to see there is no addition made to the indebtedness of the city, to restrict its expenditures strictly within the limits of the amount of money collected by the District for the purpose of meeting those expenses. If we had now to be applied to improvement desired in the city, to be applied to the streets and to sewerage in the city, the amount which goes to the liquidation of the debt in the amount of the sinking fund and interest, it would add nearly one-third of the entire amount collected. In other words, the amount collected by taxation for this year will be in the neighborhood of $1,900,000, and a like amount from the Treasury of the United States would make in the aggregate about $3,800,000; but over $1,200,000 of the entire amount is taken out for the payment of interest and for the purpose of the sinking fund. If that amount could be had, then, instead of having $240,000 or $260,000 only for making new streets, new pavements, and other improvements asked for by the people in various portions of the city, we would have this amount to add to it, and in a short time Washington would be supplied with streets to the satisfaction of everybody.

There is one thing I find, and I have no doubt that every member of Congress has heard of it, and that is that there is considerable jealousy existing between the different parts of the city as to where the money appropriated for street improvements shall be expended. The people upon the Hill, the northeast, and the southeast all believe that a greater proportion of the money has been expended in the northwestern portion of the city than ought to have been expended. But I have gone through and made a careful comparison of the amount of money collected from taxation on property of residents in the northwest, and I find that in proportion to the amount of taxation paid by them they are receiving less than they are actually entitled to for the streets in that part of the city. So that I see no need of any conflict arising or that any complaint should be made by the residents of any part of the city against the commissioners of the District or those having charge of these expenditures for the places where the expenditures are being made or to be made.

I believe that is all I desire to say in the opening of this discussion. When the bill is read by sections and is subject to amendment we will then have an opportunity of considering, item by item, every portion of the bill, and if there be objection made, or if in the estimation of any member the amount appropriated be too small or too large, of course it can be better considered there and suggestions offered than under a general discussion of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, which he can answer now or when we reach that portion of the bill to which I shall refer. I would like to know the amount received from water revenues?

Mr. FOLLETT. The amount received from water revenues?

Mr. RANDALL. One hundred and eighty-six thousand six hundred and ninety-eight dollars.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; I think not that much.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood you to say the amount of the receipts for the water department?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOLLETT. The estimated receipts are $118,000. The different items are printed in the report accompanying the bill. I will read them:

The estimated unexpended balance of water receipts, June 30, 1884, is $48,398; the estimated receipts from the water-main tax is $16,000; the estimated receipts from water-rents, $118,000; the estimated receipts from water-taps, $2,100; and the estimated receipts from water permits, $2,200.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the total?

Mr. FOLLETT. The total is, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, $186,698, of which $48,398 is the estimated unexpended balance at the close of the present fiscal year.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask if that goes to reducing the debt created for the purpose of constructing the additional water-works?

Mr. FOLLETT. We have a provision made for that in the pending bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia that we create a sinking fund for the purpose of providing for that debt. There is by law no sinking fund for the one and a half millions of dollars that the Government advanced for the building of the new aqueduct; and in this bill we have provided for one. So that the Government will have a sinking fund raised on the part of the District of Columbia to meet the $750,000 advanced.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is all I wanted to get at.

Mr. FOLLETT. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be read by sections for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES.

For salaries and contingent expenses:

For executive office: For two commissioners, at $5,000 each; one engineer commissioner, $924 (to make salary $5,000); one secretary, $2,160; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $1,400; one clerk, $1,200; one messenger, $600; one driver, $480; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and other necessary items, in the discretion of the commissioners, $2,000; in all, $20,264.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I move a formal amendment for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I notice that provision is made here, as well as in various other sections of the bill, for certain contingent expenses. In this paragraph, for instance, $2,000 is provided, and further on in the bill $500 for contingent expenses in the attorney's office. What I wish to ask is if the committee have considered whether such expenses as these can not be managed in some other manner. Four thousand dollars would seem to be a pretty good salary for the attorney. What necessity, then, arises for making an additional appropriation of $500 to meet contingent expenses in his office? I ask this generally, as it relates to various sections of the bill.

Mr. FOLLETT. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, there are a great many expenses connected in one way or another with the various departments of the city government, the commissioners' office, the engineer's office, the office of the attorney, and other departments, that we can not provide for specifically in advance. For instance, take the case of the expenditures in the attorney's office. Expenses may arise there, contingencies which can not be anticipated or appropriated for specifically in advance, so that we put in an aggregate sum to meet what we suppose will be the requirements. These different departments are required in every instance to furnish a voucher showing that it was an expense connected with the management of their department, which has to be approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury before it is paid; but if it be paid without his approval it is paid at the risk of the party paying it. There are in this as in other bills, of necessity, provisions made for contingencies or emergencies which can not be anticipated.

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For auditor's office: For one auditor, $3,000; one book-keeper, $1,800; one clerk, $1,600; three clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $600; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, and other necessary items, $300; in all, $13,900.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of addressing an inquiry to the gentleman in charge of this bill. There is an appropriation recommended here of $13,900 for the auditor's office. Last year the appropriation was $15,200, which included an item of $2,500 for temporary clerk-hire in the auditor's office, to enable the Auditor among other things to bring up and audit the books of the collector of taxes. That item is omitted from the appropriation this year. Under certain investigations made by the Committee on the District of Columbia, responsive to a resolution offered in this House relative to the management of the financial department of the District of Columbia, it would appear that that appropriation is needed more probably than it was last year. The fact appears that for some ten or a dozen years past there has been no audit of the books of the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia. In that time many millions of dollars have been collected in the way of taxes and disbursed, and there has been no systematic or regular audit of the books in the office of the collector of taxes. It seems to me to be an anomaly, and I think it would occur to any one as improper that such large sums of money should be collected and disbursed without some system by which there should be a regular and systematic audit of the books of the office through which these large sums pass.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, reporting in answer to the resolution I have referred to, brought that matter to the attention of the House and recommended that that item should be continued in the appropriation bill of the present year, and that the auditor should be instructed to go forward as rapidly as was consistent with accuracy in auditing the books of the collector of taxes and bringing the audit down to the present time.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations for the auditor's office are increased this year by one clerk at $1,200 over the regular appropriation for last year. There was an appropriation last year of $2,500 for temporary clerk-hire. That made practicable the employment of two clerks. This year the committee have given permanently one clerk, making the force of that office one auditor, one book-keeper, one clerk at $1,600, three clerks at $1,400 each, two clerks at $1,200 each. In other words, in addition to the auditor and book-keeper there are six clerks for that office, a force which the committee thought sufficient to enable them not only to bring up the work but to continue the proper conduct of the business of the office.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Last year the appropriation was $15,200. The appropriation recommended here is $13,900.

Mr. FOLLETT. The appropriation last year was $12,700, with $2,500 additional for temporary clerk-hire.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For engineer's office: One chief clerk, $1,900; three clerks, at $1,600 each; one clerk, at $1,400; two clerks, at $1,200 each; four clerks, at $900 each; one computing engineer, $2,400; one inspector of buildings, $2,400; one assistant inspector of buildings, $1,000; one chemist and inspector of asphalt and cement, $2,400; one inspector of gas and meters, who shall pay into the Treasury of the United States all fees collected by him, $2,000; one superintendent of streets, $2,000; one superintendent of roads, $1,400; one inspector of plumbing, $1,800; one superintendent of lamps, $900; superintendent of parking, $1,200; one assistant superintendent of parking, $700; one assistant engineer, $1,600; two assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; one draughtsman, $1,200; three rodmen, at $780 each; three axmen, at $650 each; three inspectors of streets, sewers, and buildings, at $1,200 each; three market-masters, at $1,200 each; one market-master, at $900; one harbor-master, at $1,200: Provided, That the fees collected by said harbor-master shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; one janitor, $700; five messengers, at $480 each; three watchmen, at $480 each; two laborers, at $360 each; contingent expenses, including rent of property-yards, books, stationery, binding, and preservation of records in the engineer's and surveyor's offices; printing, transportation (six vehicles, six animals, saddlery, forage, and repairs), and other necessary items and services, $5,000; in all, $61,950: Provided, That overseers or inspectors temporarily required in connection with sewer, street, or road work, or the construction or repair of buildings, done under contracts authorized by appropriations, shall be paid out of the sums appropriated for the work, and for the time actually engaged thereon; and the commissioners of the District, in their annual reports to Congress, shall report the number of such overseers and inspectors, and their work, and the sums paid to each, and out of what appropriation.

Mr. FOLLETT. By instruction of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 75, strike out the words "chemist and;" so that it will read "one inspector of asphalt and cement, $2,400."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. FOLLETT. I am also instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 103, after the word "animals," insert the words "care of same;" so as that it will read: "six vehicles, six animals, care of same, saddlery, forage, and repairs."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Washington Aqueduct:

For engineering, maintenance, and general repairs, $20,000; and hereafter the lessees of the Alexandria Canal shall keep in good repair at least two spans of the Aqueduct Bridge, so that no leakage or wastage of water shall occur.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask my colleague in charge of this bill a question as to this item of $20,000 for this aqueduct.

Mr. FOLLETT. I will state to my colleague that this is the water-works aqueduct, which is kept in repair by the District government. This is the same appropriation as was made last year.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is this the canal aqueduct which crosses the bridge?

Mr. FOLLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If not, I am satisfied.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

For maintaining institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons:

For Washington Asylum: For one commissioner and intendant, $1,200; one matron, $600; one visiting physician, $1,080; one resident physician, $480; one engineer, $600; one assistant engineer, $300; one overseer, $800; one clerk, $600; one baker, $420; five overseers, at $600 each; four watchmen, at $365 each; one blacksmith, $120; one hostler, $60; one cook, at $120; two cooks, at $60 each; five nurses, at $60 each; for contingent expenses, including improvements, provisions, fuel, forage, lumber, shoes, clothing, hardware, dry goods, medicines, and other necessary items, $35,000; repairs to almshouse, including new blinds, painting, and putting in gas-pipe and fixtures, and moving and refitting stable, $2,500; dump-cars, iron rails, ties, switches, joints, and spikes, to construct 2,500 feet of movable track for the purpose of grading streets and avenues in the eastern portion of the city, and for filling in marshes adjoining the asylum grounds, $2,350; in all, $52,010.

Mr. FOLLETT. By instructions of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 162, after the word "dollars" where it last occurs, insert "one ambulance, $60;" and in line 176 strike out "$52,010" and insert "$52,070."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For Reform School: For one superintendent, $1,500; assistant superintendent, $900; four teachers, $3,000; matron of school, $600; two matrons of family, $360; farmer, $480; superintendent of chair shop, $540; shoemaker, $300; baker, $300; engineer, $336; tailor, $240; seamstress, $144; two dining-room servants, at $144 each; chambermaid, $144; laundress, $144; florist, $240; cook, $300; watchmen, not exceeding five in number, $1,080; in all, $10,896.

Mr. FOLLETT. By direction of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 183 strike out the words "five hundred and forty dollars" and insert "$500." In line 185 strike out "$240" and insert "$300." In lines 192 and 193 strike out "$10,896" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,916."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For subsistence, including groceries, flour, meats, dry goods, leather, gas, coal, hardware, woodenware, table-ware, furniture, farm implements and seed, harness and repairs, fertilizers, stationery and books, plumbing, painting, and glazing, medicines and medical attention, purchase of stock, fencing, and other necessary expenditures, all in the discretion of the commissioners, over and above the income from the farm and school, $20,000; and an itemized account of said income shall be submitted to the commissioners quarterly.

Mr. FOLLETT. By instructions of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 200 strike out the word "commissioners" and insert "board of trustees." In line 201 strike out "$20,000" and insert "$22,000." In line 203, before the word "the," insert "and approved by;" so that it will read; "and an itemized account of said income shall be submitted to and approved by the commissioners quarterly."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For street lamps: For illuminating material and lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning lamps on avenues, streets, and alleys, and for purchasing and erecting new lamp-posts, $95,380: Provided, That no more than $22 per annum for each street lamp shall be paid for gas, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning under any expenditure provided for in this act; and the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not be authorized to make any contract for gas or other illuminating material, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, for any longer period than one year.

Mr. FOLLETT. By instructions of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the word "act," in the first proviso, the words "and said lamps shall burn not less than 2,600 hours per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For Metropolitan police:

For one major and superintendent, $2,600; one captain, $1,800; one property clerk, $1,800; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $900; four surgeons for the police and fire departments, at $480 each; for additional compensation to privates detailed from time to time for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $1,440, or so much thereof as may be necessary; ten lieutenants, at $1,320 dollars each; twenty sergeants, at $1,140 dollars each; ninety privates, class 1, at $900 each; one hundred and forty privates, class 2, at $1,080 each; seventeen station-keepers, at $720 each; eight laborers, at $420 dollars each; one messenger, $700; one messenger, $500; one major and superintendent, mounted, $240; one captain, mounted, $240; twenty lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; one driver, $300; one ambulance driver, $480; one assistant to driver, $300; rent of sixth and seventh precinct station-houses, substation at Uniontown, and police headquarters, $3,020; for fuel, $2,000; erection of stable in first precinct, $3,000; purchase of site and erection of new station in sixth precinct, $15,000; repairs to station-houses, $1,200; miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, books, telegraphing, photographs, printing and binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs to same, police equipments and repairs to same, beds and bed-clothing, insignia of office, horses, harness, and forage, repairs to van and ambulance, and expenses incurred in prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary items, $9,500; in all, $337,040.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding to it the proviso which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no person shall manufacture, sell, or keep for sale as a beverage any intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine, and beer.

Mr. FOLLETT. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FOLLETT. It is new legislation, and not germane to the subject-matter of the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of the rule as to what is germane to a bill. I think I shall be able to show that this amendment, if adopted, will reduce expenditures, and therefore will be germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask for the reading of clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will modify my amendment so as to reduce the amount appropriated by this paragraph from $337,040 to $137,040, and then to add the proviso which has been read. The reason I contend that this amendment is in order is that it will retrench expenditures by a reduction of the number and salaries of officers of the United States and the compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and it will also reduce expenditures generally, as I shall be able to show in the discussion of the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve all points of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The point of order has already been made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT].

Mr. BLOUNT. That point of order was upon the amendment as first offered. The gentleman has now modified his amendment, and I desire to reserve the point of order on the amendment as modified.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think that is about all I desire to say in support of my amendment being in order. I think in the discussion of that amendment I will be able to show that it will reduce expenditures by reducing the number of the officers and the salaries of the officers required in the District of Columbia. Inasmuch as the Government of the United States must pay one-half of the expenses of maintaining the government of this District, it is a very important matter that we should reduce the expenditures as far as possible, to say nothing about the moral aspect of the subject.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT] also raises the point of order that this is new legislation. There is now much new legislation in this bill—legislation not usual in such a bill. I think the gentleman will not contend that the clause in the paragraph relating to lighting the city, providing that the contract for gas shall not be for a time exceeding one year, is usual legislation. It is rather legislation in anticipation of the use of electric lights, or of something which may possibly make it inadvisable to contract for gas for two or three years at a time. Therefore the committee has put in the bill a provision that the commissioners shall not make a contract for gas for more than one year.

I also want to put into this bill a provision which will reduce the expenditures by removing the cause of expenditures. If you will look at the report of the commissioners of the District you will find that only $34,000 is received from licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this city, while we are asked to appropriate for the police of the city the enormous sum of $337,040.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I did not know there was a limit to the time for debate upon a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon a point of order is at the pleasure of the Chair, and the Chair does not desire to hear debate longer than five minutes. It is very clear to the Chair that the amendment is out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For one chief engineer, $1,800; one fire marshal, $1,000; one clerk, $900; two foremen acting as assistant engineers, at $1,200 each; six foremen, at $1,000 each; six engineers, at $1,000 each; six firemen, at $800 each; two tillermen, at $800 each; eight hostlers, at $800 each; fifty-four privates, at $720 each; three watchmen, at $720 each; one veterinary surgeon, $300; repairs to engine-houses, $750; for fuel, $2,000; purchase of horses, $2,500; forage, $6,000; hose $2,000; repairs to apparatus, $4,000; exchanging three Amoskeag engines, $9,000; contingent expenses, including office-rent, horseshoeing, furniture, washing, oil, medical and stable supplies, harness, blacksmithing, labor, gas, and other necessary items, $7,500; purchase of site and erection of new engine-house, $10,000; in all, $115,990: Provided, That $1 per month out of the appropriation for each man in the fire department shall be retained by the commissioners as a firemen's relief fund, and used for the relief of any fireman who by accident, while in actual performance of duty, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from service therefor, and in case of his death, leaving a widow, or children under 16 years of age, for their relief: Provided further, That such relief shall not exceed for any one fireman or his family the sum of $40 per month.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move to amend by striking out in line 340 the words "out of the appropriation" and inserting in lieu thereof "additional pay;" also by striking out in line 341 the words "retained by" and inserting the words "paid to."

Mr. EATON. I would like to hear the proviso as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That $1 per month additional pay for each man in the fire department shall be paid to the commissioners as a firemen's relief fund, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Courts:

For the police court: For one judge, $3,000; one clerk, $1,800; one deputy clerk, $1,000; two bailiffs, at $3 per day each; one messenger, $900; one doorkeeper, $540; United States marshal's fees, $1,400; contingent expenses, including compensation of a justice of the peace acting as judge of the police court during the absence of said judge, not exceeding $300, books, stationery, fuel, ice, gas, witness fees, and other necessary items, $3,000; for judicial expenses, $2,500; in all, $16,018.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move to amend by inserting in line 365, after the words "one clerk, $1,800," the words "and hereafter the salary of said clerk shall be $1,800 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For teachers: For five hundred and fifty-five teachers, to be employed at a rate of compensation not to exceed the rate provided by the present schedule of salaries, and at an average salary not to exceed $670, $371,850.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$670" and inserting "$750," and by making a corresponding increase in the aggregate appropriation in this paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. The pay of these teachers has been increased $5; and provision has been made for thirty additional teachers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But an increase of only five dollars, with $150,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury, is not at all commensurate with the demand made upon us to advance the cause of education in this District.

Mr. Chairman, the increase which I propose amounts to $44,400 in the aggregate, and when distributed among the five hundred and fifty-five teachers in the District of Columbia amounts to only $80 each. Why, sir, a messenger in the Pension Office gets $840 per annum, and these little pages on this floor receive $75 a month during the session of Congress; and shall we higgle about a fair and reasonable increase of the salaries of the faithful instructors of the youth in this city, but who you will find by reference to the last annual report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia come from every section of our common country?

On page 12 the commissioners say:

Many families are locating in Washington with a view of giving their children an education, and there are now borne upon the rolls of the public schools the names of children from every section of the country. It is very evident, by the record of the places of birth submitted by the parents, that the money appropriated for maintaining our public-school system really benefits the several States and Territories of the Union as well as the District of Columbia.

We have just now appropriated $16,018 for the police court and $337,040 for the Metropolitan police, besides $62,906 for the Washington Asylum and Reform School; in all, $415,964 for what may chiefly be attributed to the evils resulting from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage; while we content ourselves with the meager appropriation recommended by the cool, calculating Committee on Appropriations for the teachers, who are for the most part women, engaged in the most honorable of all the professions.

It is worth while to note the fact that for every teacher in the District of Columbia there are two places here where intoxicating liquors are sold.

I submit a letter from the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 29, 1884.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries respecting the number of licenses issued to wholesale and retail liquor dealers in the District of Columbia and the amount of revenue derived therefrom, the commissioners have the honor to state that the total number of bar-room (retail) licenses issued during the present license year to date is 562, and the total number of wholesale liquor licenses to date is 535, making in all 1,097.

The amount received for the bar-room licenses to date is $56,016.71, and the amount for wholesale liquor licenses to date $13,558.07.

Very respectfully,

J. B. EDMONDS, President.

Hon. JOHN D. WHITE, Member of Congress.

Besides the 1,097 regular wholesale and retail liquor dealers there are about 120 sacred institutions known as drug stores, which keep open "every day and Sunday too" in the District of Columbia.

Last year there were 15,607 arrests in the District of Columbia, of which number there were 11,367 arrested for offenses against the person. There were 55 sent to the reform school; 235 placed under bonds to keep the peace; 896 were sent to jail; 1,255 were sent to the workhouse, and so on.

For intoxication alone there were 3,752 arrested, and for disorderly conduct 529.

On page 15 of the report for 1883 by the major and superintendent of police I find the nativity of those arrested classified as follows:

The population of the District of Columbia in 1870 was as follows: Washington, 109,199; Georgetown, 11,384—total, 120,583; and in 1880 was as follows: Washington, 147,293; Georgetown, 12,578; Hillsdale Village, 672; Giesborough, 201—total, 160,744.

It is sad to think that here at the capital of the nation, during the last fiscal year, for every ten persons in the District of Columbia there was one person arrested, and that more than one-fourth of the number arrested were under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

As I have shown by a letter from Mr. J. B. Edmonds, president of the board of commissioners for the District of Columbia, the amount received for bar-room licenses and wholesale liquor licenses is about $70,000 per annum; whereas by the report of the superintendent of police, page 32, I find that the estimate of expenses for the Metropolitan police alone for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, is $334,600, as follows:

Estimate of expenses for Metropolitan police for fiscal year 1885.

When we know, as every intelligent man must know, that the injurious effects from the use as a beverage of intoxicating liquors are universally admitted, and that spirituous liquors are powerful instruments for evil and corruption in our elections, and that the unbridled traffic in spirituous liquors promotes contentions, riots, ignorance, and poverty, and that the iniquity of alcoholism is visited through the parent "upon the third and fourth generations," and that the effects of alcoholism are filling our prisons, houses of correction, and institutions of charity with criminals and sufferers and covering the land with woe and misery, I confess that a feeling of mortification akin to indignation comes over me when I think of the cool manner in which my amendment, offered a few moments ago, to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within the District of Columbia, was ruled out on a point of order, and a chuckle of delight was heard to echo through the Hall of this House in the Capitol of the nation.

Mr. Chairman, do you not know that during the last ten years this country has produced the enormous quantity of 740,000,000 gallons of distilled spirits alone, and that all but 70,000,000 gallons of that quantity have been consumed in the United States? Is it any wonder that Hon. WILLIAM T. PRICE, in House Report No. 1107, after a most careful investigation of the alcoholic liquor traffic, is led to the following conclusions?

It is established by official reports that there were manufactured during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, of distilled spirits 65,678,666 gallons. In its production there were consumed 18,644,787 bushels of grain. During the same period there were manufactured of fermented liquors 17,757,892 barrels.

The total amount of revenue paid to the Government the last fiscal year on distilled spirits was $74,368,775.20, and upon fermented liquors $16,900,615.81.

There were of retail dealers in distilled spirits, who paid a special tax as such, 168,770; of wholesale dealers, 4,241.

Of retail dealers in fermented liquors, 8,006; of wholesale dealers, 2,168—an aggregate of 183,203 persons directly engaged in the liquor traffic.

It is computed that the cost to the consumers of the liquors sold by the 176,776 retail liquor dealers the last fiscal year was about $850,000,000.

In an able article in the New York Tribune, September 27, 1882, the sum is put down at $800,000,000. The writer says:

"It does no good to sneer at the agitation in regard to the liquor traffic.

"The subject is too important to be laughed down.

"Aside from the law-defying it has elicited, aside from all its moral and religious aspects, the question, considered purely as one of dollars and cents in its effects upon the national prosperity and wealth, is one of the most important that can be named.

"Directly and indirectly this country spends in the liquor traffic every year a sum exceeding half the national debt. The cost to the country of this traffic, direct and indirect, is greater than the profits of all its capital not invested in real estate. It costs every year more than our whole civil service, our Army, our Navy, our Congress, including the river and harbor and the pension bills, our wasteful local governments, and all national, State, county, and local debts, besides all the schools in the country. In fact, this country pays more for liquors than for every function of every kind of government.

"How is that question to be put aside with a sneer?

"There is certainly paid for drink more than $800,000,000, and the entire sum raised by taxes of all kinds—national, State, county, city, town, and school-district—is stated on the authority of the Census Bureau to be not more than about $700,000,000."

Among the petitioners for the passage of this bill (for a commission on the alcoholic liquor traffic) the belief is entertained that this enormous traffic is detrimental to the public welfare; that large as is the amount of revenue paid to the National Government by the distillers, brewers, and liquor dealers, the loss is infinitely greater to the tax-payers of the country from the expenditures occasioned by the liquor traffic.

That it is the cause of at least 90 per cent. of all the crime existing.

That it is the cause of three-fourths of all the pauperism in the country.

That it causes the existence of 600,000 drunkards.

That 100,000 annually die or are disabled from its effects.

That 9,338 are annually made insane from the use of intoxicants.

That the number of days' work lost to the country annually by reason of this traffic, at $1 per day, is not less than a quarter of a million of dollars.

That by the laws of heredity the cases of insanity are increasing with terrible rapidity.

That it creates 120,000 widows and orphans annually.

That it causes 50,000 murders annually.

Judge Park said that 99 per cent. of all crime was produced by it.

That 100,000 are annually sent to jail for drunkenness.

Are these charges true or nearly true?

If you admit their truth, you can not deny that some remedy should be applied, if you desire to see this a happy people or a prosperous nation.

During the discussion of the bill for the extension of the bonded period for the 64,000,000 gallons of bourbon and rye whiskies then in bond, it was stated on this floor by a gentleman from Ohio that one-tenth of all the property in Cincinnati was invested in the whisky business.

In the State of Kentucky the whisky in bond alone is now estimated to be worth over $150,000,000, while all the public buildings in Washington have cost but $51,346,468, as follows:

It is time to call a halt. The country looks to Congress to begin reform in the District of Columbia; 350,000 voters in Ohio have taken a firm stand, and the politicians of that State have learned that a Republican candidate for governor can not carry water on both shoulders.

Iowa has taken the lead and shown to the world that the Republican party in that State has gained more strength since it declared for "free homes" against "free saloons," and enforces laws to the effect that "no person shall manufacture, sell, or keep for sale as a beverage any intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine, and beer."

At a mass-meeting held at London, in the eighth Congressional district, Kentucky, March 11, 1884, the following resolutions were adopted:

The committee appointed to draught resolutions returned the following, which was adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That we unanimously indorse the action of our members and senators in the Kentucky Legislature in regard to the suppression of the liquor traffic throughout the State, and more especially in this and adjoining counties, and urgently request that the bill now pending prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors in less quantities than twenty gallons in the counties of Laurel, Rockcastle, Jackson, Clay, and Owsley be made a law."

W. L. Brown presented the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, That we are in favor of the passage of all laws tending to prohibit the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors in our county.

"2. Resolved, That we indorse the course of our members in Congress who opposed the extension of the bonded period of the whisky now in bond.

"3. Resolved, That we are in favor of the repeal of all concealed weapon laws, and recommend the passage of a law making it a penitentiary offense to draw or attempt to draw a deadly weapon, except in self-defense.

"4. Resolved, That we favor a law putting a heavy tax or penalty on the sale of pistols, unlawful knives, and pistol-cartridges.

"5. Resolved, That we favor the passage of the above laws because they will have a tendency to improve society, morality, and good order, will relieve our court dockets, stop a heavy tax on the people, clear our prisons, invite immigration, and develop the hidden resources of our State."

Adopted.

George Faris offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That our Representatives and Senators in Congress be requested to pass a law prohibiting the issuing of license by the revenue officers of the United States to any person to vend spirituous liquors, ale, beer, or wine, or any intoxicating liquors or mixture thereof in any town, county, or municipality where local option or any prohibitory liquor law exists in any State of the Union."

Adopted.

There being no other business the meeting adjourned.

D. R. BROCK, Chairman.
C. W. JONES, Secretary.

Be it said to the honor of the grand old Commonwealth of Kentucky that before the adjournment on the 12th instant of the General Assembly of that State, by special acts it became "unlawful for any person to sell, directly or indirectly, any spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, ale, wine, or beer, or a mixture thereof, or of either," in Laurel, Rock Castle, Jackson, Owsley, Clay, besides nine other counties in Southeastern Kentucky. Local-option laws are rapidly confining the sale of alcoholic liquors to the large towns and cities in the State.

We owe it to the 56,000,000 of people of the United States to have as good government in the District of Columbia as there is in the State of Iowa. We can only do so by closing up the saloons here and paying liberal salaries to the teachers who have the training of the youth.

This question, like that of slavery in 1856, is in politics and it is not to be sneered away. It is a live issue. If any man doubts it he will be permitted to become a converted Thomas after the November election. There are no less than 1,000,000 voters in the United States who believe in the principles involved in the prohibition victory in Iowa. They are so distributed from Maine to California, from North Carolina to Oregon, as to make themselves felt in the fall elections, and you may be assured that they are not sleeping.

The amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that the committee rise in order that the hour for the recess may be extended, so that the consideration of this District appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole may be concluded.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6656) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for the recess be extended so as to allow the Committee of the Whole to conclude the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

HOUR OF MEETING AT EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order heretofore made for Friday night sessions be so far modified that the House after the recess shall reassemble at 8 o'clock instead of half past 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the order will be so modified. The Chair hears no objection.

OHIO ELECTION CONTEST—WALLACE VS. M'KINLEY.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to give notice that on Monday morning next I shall endeavor to call up and have considered the contested-election case of Wallace vs. McKinley, from the State of Ohio.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6656) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no payment shall be made of any certificate issued by the late board of audit of the District of Columbia under authority of the act approved June 20, 1874, that shall not be presented for payment within one year from the date of the approval of this act; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to cause notice to be given to the holders of said certificates to make presentation within the time fixed, by publication in two newspapers published in the city of Washington each once a week for three successive weeks immediately following the approval of this act, and once a week for three successive weeks immediately preceding the date of expiration of the time fixed herein within which payment may be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to inquire whether there has been any limitation heretofore with reference to the presentation of these certificates?

Mr. FOLLETT. It is intended now to fix a limitation for the purpose of closing up the business.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the District been paying them regularly?

Mr. FOLLETT. Yes, sir. The law was passed several years ago. The object now is to get them all in.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6770) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes; the bill (H. R. 6861) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes; and the bill (H. R. 6656) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments and with a recommendation that the bills be passed with the amendments.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 251) providing for printing the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1884; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to ask that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the three appropriation bills just reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman that if the previous question should now be ordered it will be necessary to go on and conclude these bills to-morrow, which would interfere with the business assigned for that day.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not my intention to ask for a vote on these bills until Monday.

Mr. REED. I submit that it would be well not to have the previous question ordered. There will be no attempt to interfere with the vote upon the bills on Monday.

Mr. RANDALL. My wish is that the vote shall not be taken on these bills until Monday, so that the Judiciary Committee may have the whole day to-morrow.

Mr. REED. The purpose of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to these appropriation bills will not be interfered with at all.

Mr. RANDALL. If I can have that assurance——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his proposition?

Mr. RANDALL. Even if the previous question should be ordered, it is not my intention to call for a vote on the bills until Monday.

Mr. REED. If it can be made by unanimous consent the vote shall not be called until Monday, I will be satisfied with that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that agreement will not be made.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I do not demand the previous question.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for present consideration authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury in trust by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes, and for other purposes.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Is not the House compelled to take a recess at 5 o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House by unanimous consent extended that time so as to complete action in committee on the appropriation bills.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. And that has been done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has. Does the gentleman demand the regular order?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I do.

Mr. WELLER. Then I will only ask that my joint resolution shall be printed in the RECORD. Nobody will object to that.

The proposed joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury in trust by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes, and for other purposes.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized, out of any lawful money deposited by national banks for the purpose of retiring their circulation, under the provisions of section 4 of the act of July 20, 1874, and of sections 5222 and 5230 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and of section 6 of the act of July 12, 1882, to purchase, at not exceeding the par value thereof, under such regulations as he may prescribe not inconsistent therewith, any bonds of the United States now outstanding; the bonds so purchased to be held in trust and used as security for the payment of the circulating notes of the banks which have or may deposit lawful money for such redemption and payment: Provided, however, Whenever the circulating notes of national banking associations, for the retirement of which lawful money has been deposited, are presented to the Treasury for redemption, the Secretary of the Treasury shall use any available moneys in the Treasury for the redemption thereof, and to that extent the bonds so held shall be canceled and destroyed together with the interest thereon: And further provided, All of the interest accruing on said bonds or any of them shall be canceled as it matures: And further provided, That all of said bonds and the interest thereon shall by the Secretary of the Treasury be canceled and destroyed whenever it shall appear to him that the outstanding notes of said banking associations are destroyed or lost, the intent being that the Government shall redeem by lawful-money payment all such notes so provided for and also to cancel all of said bonds and interests thereon accruing as stated hereinbefore.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. CUTCHEON, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. LORE, for ten days, on account of important business.

Mr. MATSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In obedience to the order of the House the recess will now be taken.

And then (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1884.

Hon. J. B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives:

I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore during the session this evening.

Respectfully,

J. G. CARLISE, Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House meets to-night.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening session bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar under the order just read.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar under the special order just read. The Clerk will report the first bill.

WALTER H. CROW.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6084) to restore the name of Walter H. Crow to the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to restore the name of Walter H. Crow, late a sergeant of Company K, Thirty-third Indiana Volunteers, to the pension-roll.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with in that case. It was discussed at some length the other night, and I move to amend the bill, to meet the objections of the gentleman from Alabama, who is not yet present, by adding the words "from and after the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is an amendment pending to the bill, offered by the gentleman from Alabama on the last evening when the House considered the Private Calendar, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill: "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAURA J. GODDARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5544) for the relief of Laura J. Goddard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Laura J. Goddard, widow of Elisha M. Goddard, formerly a private in Company C, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

Elisha M. Goddard, husband of the petitioner, was mustered into the service of the United States as a private in Company C, Sixth Vermont Volunteers, October 15, 1861, and was discharged October 31, 1862.

On the 16th day of April, 1862, he received a gunshot wound of both legs at a place called Lee's Mills, in the State of Virginia. For his disability he first received a pension of $6 per month, which was subsequently increased to $8. The justice of his claim was therefore recognized by the Pension Bureau. He died August 25, 1881.

The widow filed her application on the 3d of April, 1882. The Pension Office rejected it in the following words:

"The claimant's allegation that the soldier died from the results of the disability for which he was discharged, and for which he was subsequently pensioned, is not sustained; the condition and nature of the gunshot wounds of the right thigh and left knee do not indicate that they were in any manner the cause of the soldier's fatal disease, consumption. The claim is therefore rejected."

The evidence upon which this decision is based is found in the brief accompanying the case, and is copied verbatim, as follows:

"Dr. Henry W. Lawrence, of Ballston Spa, N. Y., testifies that he attended the soldier during about fifteen months and in his last illness; he died August 25, 1881, of consumption, the remote or exciting cause being a gunshot wound causing general debility; that the soldier's disease was not caused or aggravated by bad habits.

"Dr. H. W. Lawrence, in an additional affidavit, states that he prescribed for the soldier about fifteen months; at that time the wound was not discharging. The soldier was in the advanced stages of consumption, the disease having progressed more rapidly after wounds healed. The general debility, caused by the wounds, superinduced the pulmonary disease.

"Dr. Benjamin W. Noxon testifies that he attended the soldier for about six years; his condition was weak, and his general health bad; he suffered more or less from his wounds, and his days were much shortened by reason of said wounds and exposure in the Army.

"In an additional affidavit Dr. Noxon states that the soldier died of pulmonary consumption, induced by the wound on his hip-joint. This wound greatly affected his health and strength, producing weakness and debility, resulting in the lung disease. That the wound closed some time before death, and after this discharge ceased the lung disease became more prominent."

Office record gives professional standing good and credibility good of these physicians.

"Aaron Goddard testifies that the soldier came to Cohoes after his discharge. He had been severely wounded by a ball through his hips and the lower part of his body; also one through his leg, near the knee; had to use crutches for several years, and his constitution seemed to be broken down. He was quite feeble and unable to perform manual labor, and gradually grew worse till he died. The soldier's disability was not prolonged or aggravated by immoral conduct or intemperance. The physicians who first treated him when he returned are now dead.

"Daniel Chambers testifies that he knew the soldier intimately for the past twelve years. He was in feeble health, occasioned by wounds in the hip; was unable to perform much labor; it troubled him to stoop or lift anything; he kept dwindling away, and died of consumption August 25, 1881. Soldier's habits were good."

Notwithstanding the conclusion of the pension examiners, with the foregoing evidence before them (the affiants accepted by the office as reputable persons) your committee must decide that the soldier's death was the result of the wounds received in the service, and that his widow should be pensioned. They, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES P. MAHAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3728) granting a pension to Charles P. Mahan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles P. Mahan, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment, New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

Claimant enlisted August 30, 1862, and served as private in Company G, One hundred and forty-sixth New York Volunteers, until July 16, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. He filed application for pension April 3, 1879, alleging that he was injured on the 13th of May, 1864, at Chancellorsville, by a stampede of horses, being knocked down and trampled upon, bruising his leg; afterward a bunch appeared upon the leg and this continued to increase until removed by surgeon on the 25th day of November, 1878, weighing ten pounds.

Jerome Seance, a comrade of claimant, knew him in the service; was present when the stampede occurred, May 13, 1864; did not see the injury inflicted, but saw claimant immediately afterward; he complained then of injury; said he was trampled upon; camped with claimant; saw his leg, it was inflamed and swollen. Comrades Goodfellow and Contuntle knew claimant in service; knew he was injured at stampede; did not see injury inflicted, heard of it within a day or two, and knew generally that injury was to thigh, and of the character herein described.

Several neighbors of claimant, residing in the same village with him, knew him from time of his return from the war up to the time the tumor was removed from the thigh in November, 1878; saw him very frequently; knew he was lame when he returned; heard him say it was caused by injury received in a stampede at Chancellorsville in May, 1864, and knew he was disabled from performing manual labor.

Colonel Brown, of the Fifty-seventh Regiment, New York, resides in the same village with claimant; has known him since his discharge; knew of his lameness and its continuance up to the time of surgical operation; his father was one of the operators; heard claimant describe injury; knew that by reason of injury claimant was disabled from performing manual service.

All the witnesses unite in saying that claimant is respectable, worthy, and truthful.

Upon this evidence and personal examination of claimant, the examining surgeon, on the 11th day of August, 1880, reported that, in his opinion, the claimant was permanently incapacitated for manual labor, and that the disability was permanent.

April 8, 1882, the case was referred by Pension Department as follows, namely:

"Respectfully referred to W. R. Wood, medical referee, with the request that he state whether, in his opinion, the tumor resulted from the alleged injury, and, if not, whether claimant has been disabled since discharged by reason of said injury or results, the origin of which are not definitely shown.

"J. W. MINER.

"APRIL 8, 1882."

To which the following reply was made to Judge Walker:

"Respectfully returned to Judge Walker. If it is shown to your satisfaction that claimant received an injury in the location of the tumor on right leg, we will have to admit it (the tumor) as the result of said injury.

"W. R. WOOD, Medical Referee.

"APRIL 18, 1882."

The claim was rejected by the Department February 17, 1883, in the following language:

"Rejected, because claimant can not prove that the injury or tumor was caused while in the service."

Your committee are of the opinion that the evidence of injury is complete. The claimant himself is a worthy and truthful man; the comrades have no interest, and, although they did not see the injury inflicted, they were present, and establish the fact that the stampede did occur; they heard the claimant describe the injury immediately after it occurred. One of them saw the limb; it was inflamed and swollen. The neighbors describe the appearance after his return. The character of the injury, accompanied as it was with results, after a lapse of fourteen years, repels the idea of the claim being a subterfuge or pretense. Wherefore we report favorably, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M'ANNY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2394) granting a pension to James McAnny.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James McAnny, late quartermaster-sergeant of Company C, First Regiment New Jersey Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2394) granting a pension to James McAnny, having considered the same, submit the following report:

In the petitioner's declaration for a pension he states that he entered the service of the United States on the 27th day of July, 1861, in Company C, of the First Regiment New York Cavalry, and was honorably discharged at Camp Bayard, Virginia, on the 12th day of January, 1863. This statement is confirmed by the certificate of discharge.

The claimant alleges that while on a scouting expedition near Culpeper Court-House, in the State of Virginia, he was injured by his horse being shot and falling on him, which broke several of his ribs and hurt his lungs, and that at the same time and place he received a gunshot wound in left leg, and that he was treated in hospital at Washington, and also at Chester Hospital, in the town of Chester, Pa.

The records in the Adjutant-General's office show that he was with his company in July and August, 1862; sick and absent September and October, 1862; present for duty November and December, 1862; present, sick, January, 1863, and discharged January 12, 1863, on account of disability. Regular return, July, 1862, reports him among "absent enlisted men;" cause not stated. No evidence of wounds on company roll. From the 28th of July to the 8th of August the company (with the regiment) was in the advance of Pope's Army of Virginia, performing scout and picket duty between Culpeper Court-House and the Rapidan.

The certificate of discharge, signed by F. V. Dayton, assistant surgeon, says that, having examined James McAnny, finds him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of tuberculosis, with great disability, rendering him entirely unfit for duty.

D. B. Ingersoll, examining surgeon, under date of December 23, 1878, says, that the soldier is totally disabled, and that, judging from the evidence, it is his belief that the disability did originate in the service, and that he finds that the seventh and eighth ribs on left side have been broken, and they now press upon the lung and prevent its expansion.

As to the applicant's condition prior and subsequent to enlistment, John Moore swears, under date of June 12, 1878:

"That he has been well and intimately acquainted with the claimant for thirty years; associated with him frequently before and since the war, and knows of his own personal knowledge that he was a stout, healthy man before he enlisted, and free from any disease of lung or injury to leg. Had he not been so, affiant would certainly have known it. Claimant came home from the Army sick with lung disease, which has affected him ever since. Understood that he was injured by his horse while in the Army."

Peter J. Woolston makes statement under oath substantially as above.

John E. Carey, M. D., testifies that he has "treated McAnny more or less since 1871 for consumption of left lung, which appears more affected than the right lung. He has been unable to work at times since I first examined him. He is a temperate man in regard to all things, so far as I know."

The claim was deemed inadmissible by the Pension Office because the claimant could not produce the evidence of officers or comrades or of treatment in the service.

Judging by the claimant's own statement under oath, he did receive the injuries from which he is now suffering in the service and the line of duty, and as he has proven by credible witnesses that he was sound and healthy when he entered the service, and seriously disabled when he left, your committee conclude that he is deserving of a pension, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. GRIFFITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1046) granting a pension to Mary A. Griffith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed and required to place the name of Mrs. Mary A. Griffith, mother of William D. Griffith, late a private in Company F, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month; said pension to commence on the 1st day of January, A. D. 1867, and to continue during her widowhood; and in the event of the marriage or death of the said Mary A. Griffith such pension shall cease.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1046) granting a pension to Mary A. Griffith, having considered the same, beg leave to make the following report:

The papers in this case show that William D. Griffin was mustered into the service of the United States as a private on the 28th day of September, 1862, at Lockport, N. Y., in Company F, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, and that he was killed at the battle of Monocacy, at Monocacy Junction, in the State of Maryland, on July 9, 1864. The Adjutant-General's report says:

"Missing since July 9, 1864; supposed to be taken prisoner; but prisoners taken at that time and since paroled report him killed July 9, 1864."

He left a widow but no children. The papers indicate that the widow received a pension. She has since remarried, which debars her from the pension. It seems that the mother of the petitioner, Mrs. Mary Griffin, applied for a pension prior to the marriage of the widow, as the jacket containing the mother's affidavit bears this indorsement, "Rejected; widow in receipt of pension, August 26, 1865." Under the law the mother can not receive a pension through the action of the Pension Office, as section 4707 of the pension laws provides that where a soldier dies who is entitled to an invalid pension, leaving a wife or children, no other relative or relatives shall be entitled to receive a pension, notwithstanding such relative may have been dependent upon him for support prior to his death. The inference then is that should the widow die or remarry, leaving no children, by her first marriage, under sixteen years of age, the right to a pension, resulting from the soldier, terminates in toto, and no title to any party remains.

The question then is, has this mother a moral or equitable right to support from the Government, to be determined by the following affidavits, which show conclusively that she was dependent upon her son for a maintenance.

James Duncan and Richard Winthrop, jr., swear "that they have been well and intimately acquainted with her (Mary Griffin) and her deceased son, her husband, and with all the circumstances of the family for the past ten years. That she has not now, nor has she had since deponents' acquaintance with her, any property whatever, except the necessary household furniture and wearing apparel. The said William D. Griffin resided at home with his mother up to the time of his enlistment. That he was a cooper by trade and worked at his trade in the city of Lockport for ten years prior to his enlistment, and was not married until after his enlistment. That Griffin's father, for three or four years prior to his death, was unable, on account of disease and infirmity, to labor but very little, and could not contribute to the support of his wife. That during this time, and after the father's death, until his enlistment he resided at home, and contributed to the support of his mother and the family all of his wages, purchasing the fuel, provisions, clothing, and the other necessaries. The deponents are of the opinion that the amount contributed for the family was $150 per year, that they know she was dependent upon her son as stated, and that she is now needy and dependent. That she has a son 19 years of age, and a daughter 12 years old, who is sickly, and needs much care. That they know William D. Griffin left a widow, who has since his death married one William Leroy."

The mother, in her affidavit, says:

That she has not now, nor has she had since the death of her husband, any property whatever excepting necessary furniture and wearing apparel. That her son William lived at home with her prior to enlistment, and that he materially contributed to her support by giving her his wages, supplying her with food, clothing, and other necessaries. That her son was not married until after his enlistment, and that she is needy and dependent, and prays for a pension for her support.

The committee are of the opinion that William D. Griffin did support his mother, and that in his death her loss is irreparable. She is now 72 years old, and is in needy circumstances. As the law precludes her getting relief through the regular channel of the Pension Office, the committee think a special act should pass for her benefit, and therefore recommend the adoption of the bill accompanying, with the following amendments: Strike out the word "Griffith" wherever it occurs in line 5, and insert "Griffin." Strike out all in the bill after the word "pension-roll" in line 7, and insert "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws." Amend the title by striking out "Mary A. Griffith," and insert "Mary A. Griffin."

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. HORR. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if there are any precedents for this; or whether any special acts have been passed in cases where the widow or children have been entitled to a pension, and where the children have passed the age and the widow has died or remarried, where the pension has reverted to any person who under the law would not have been entitled to it if the widow was living or had not married?

Mr. MATSON. I will take pleasure in answering the gentleman from Michigan by saying that there has been a precedent established at this session of Congress for one instance. There was a bill passed the House of a precisely similar character to this during this session. I think it was the case of some person from the State of Iowa.

Mr. HORR. I have no recollection of any such cases.

Mr. MATSON. The case to which I allude was a case where on the death of a soldier the pension had terminated, or where the widow had remarried, and the mother just as in this case, being a person wholly dependent, was the beneficiary. Congress revived the pension by giving it to the dependent mother.

Mr. HORR. I did not gather from the reading of the report when this soldier was married.

Mr. MATSON. He married after enlistment; perhaps after his discharge; I am not positive.

Mr. PETERS. No; during his term of service.

Mr. MATSON. At the time of his enlistment there is no question that the mother was dependent upon him, and is even more dependent now than before. She is without property and quite old.

In this case the soldier after his enlistment married. While in the service he was sick or died from disease, I have forgotten which. But at all events he died in the service. His wife remarried leaving no children. When she remarried the pension terminated. This proposes to revive the right of a pension in the dependent mother.

Mr. HORR. I can see that the mother has strong equities in the case; but it seems to me that it throws open the doors to a large class of cases. I have not known of instances of this kind before, though there may have been some. I may be mistaken as to there being a large class of claims of this character. From the statements of gentlemen around me it is thought that there may not be very many.

Mr. MATSON. So far as the precedents are concerned, I have in my mind a very distinct recollection of a case which I think I am safe in saying was precisely like this. So far as the danger of establishing such a precedent is concerned I think there is not much.

This is a case which presents some extreme features. The woman is very old. She was dependent on her son at the time of his enlistment, more than twenty years ago, and has grown more helpless and dependent since; and I do not apprehend there is danger of any great drain upon the Treasury because of many cases of this kind in which we may be called upon to give relief.

Mr. LAIRD. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions one question. The report states as a matter of law or of construction from the law that during the life of any person entitled in the first instance to a pension, whatever may be the claims of the mother or father of the deceased soldier, they can not receive any assistance from the Government. Is that a matter of construction placed on the law by the committee, or is that the law itself?

Mr. MATSON. From some confusion in the Hall I did not exactly understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. LAIRD. My question is this: If the widow received a pension can the mother or father under any circumstances receive one?

Mr. MATSON. They can not. There can be but one pension given.

Mr. LAIRD. That is as the law stands?

Mr. MATSON. That is the law.

Mr. LAIRD. It is not a question of the construction of the law by the committee?

Mr. MATSON. No, sir; that is the law.

Mr. PETERS. I was in hopes that some one else would propound the question I am about to put, because I confess I dislike to do so. I see the report states this lady has a son 19 years old. Now, is there evidence showing that this son is unable to contribute to the support of his mother?

Mr. MATSON. My recollection of the report, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Kansas, is that this son, who is 19 years old, is in feeble health and in his mother's charge.

Mr. PETERS. The report states it in this way: That she has a son 19 years of age and a daughter 12 years of age, who is sickly. There is no reference made to the condition of the son.

Mr. MATSON. I see I was mistaken in the answer I gave to the gentleman. I only know the facts from having heard the report read. As to the particular details of the case I am not informed. Perhaps I was so at the time it was being considered in the committee, but if so I have forgotten them. Neither the gentleman who introduced the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEVENS], nor the gentleman who reported it [Mr. BAGLEY] is present, and I can not myself give the gentleman from Kansas an answer to his question. If there is any serious objection to the bill or a desire for further information on the part of members, I ask that it be passed over informally.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think the bill had better be passed over. But I wish to state the case referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] was not altogether like this one. In that case the widow never did apply for a pension at all.

Mr. MATSON. She waived her right.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. And no pension at all was ever granted to the widow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally.

Mr. CULLEN. I do not think there is any necessity for passing the bill over. My recollection from the discussion in the committee is that there is a great deal of merit in this case, perhaps more than there is in the average of cases that come before this committee. That this old lady is dependent and in indigent circumstances is not disputed; and that nobody else is drawing the pension on account of this soldier is also undisputed. The widow in remarrying waived her right to that pension. As to this 19-year-old boy there is nothing to show that he is in any condition to support or even contribute largely to the support of his aged mother, now 72 years of age.

It appears to me, in view of all the surroundings in this case, that the bill ought to pass. I therefore move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CULLEN] that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Before that question is put I desire to say that there is nothing in the report going to show that this 19-year-old boy is not an able-bodied young man; and there is no statement in the report that he is not working for his mother and contributing to her support. I think if the young man was in a condition physically that he could not work for his mother the report would have been very apt to have stated it. In fact, we have a right to presume it would have stated it from the circumstance that it does state that the daughter is in bad health. Stating that fact as to the daughter, certainly if the boy had been in bad health it would have stated that. The mother in this case is not entitled to a pension under the law. That is admitted by all. The law grants a pension to the widow, and here for a number of years the widow drew the pension; but when she remarried no one under the law was entitled to the pension.

Now if we are going to pass a special act in every such case as this, and when the widow remarries grant a pension to the mother because she was dependent, I think that had better be done by a general act so as to apply the rule to all alike.

I think it is due to all dependent mothers of soldiers that we should not select certain particular cases outside of the law and grant pensions to them, but we ought to treat all alike. It would be a very easy matter to frame a general law to cover all such cases, and if this Congress is ready for such a law as that we ought to say so and not be continually passing special bills granting relief to particular persons. I am opposed to any special legislation where a general law can be framed to cover the cases.

There are some cases that you can not reach by general legislation, and if any remedy is to be provided it is necessary to pass special acts for the purpose. But this is not such a case. A general law can be framed to grant to dependent mothers of soldiers the pensions which terminate when the widows remarry or the children arrive at the age of 16. There is no reason why special bills should be passed by Congress in such cases. Hence I think that this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman from Alabama has stated this case very fairly and very frankly. But this bill is now before the House because under a strict construction of the law the Pension Office can not grant a pension in this case. That is the fact in reference to every special pension bill that is introduced into this House. These special cases come here simply because a literal and strict construction of the law will not authorize the Commissioner of Pensions to grant pensions in such cases.

We are here to take the equity view of the case, and if, all things considered, we think the case is a deserving one it is our duty to grant relief by special act. If we are to be governed by the stubborn and strict construction of the law, then every one of these special cases is out of order. From the knowledge I have of pension cases, I think that this is one of more than average merit on the equity side. I have no feeling in this matter other than the feeling I have for all unfortunate persons of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying aside the bill as amended to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was taken; and it was so ordered.

FRANCES HASENZAHL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4828) for the relief of Frances Hasenzahl.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to rerate the pension of Frances Hasenzahl, widow of Christopher Hasenzahl, formerly a member of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment New York State Volunteers, at $8 per month, commencing at the death of her said husband, deducting therefrom the amount that has already been paid.

The Committee on Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "rerate the pension" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "place on the pension-roll the name;" also, strike out, at the end of the bill, all after the words "New York State Volunteers."

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4828) for the relief of Frances Hasenzahl, having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

Christopher Hasenzahl, husband of Frances Hasenzahl, the petitioner, enlisted in the service May 14, 1861, as a private in Company C, Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, and was discharged May 12, 1863. He received a shell wound in head at the battle of Manassas, August 30, 1862, and was sent to hospital. About one week after his return to his company (in December, 1862) he was attacked with an epileptic fit, resulting from said wound, and was subject to them until his death, which occurred July 27, 1879. He was pensioned at $8 per month, and the original invalid pension paper says, "approved for epilepsy, the result of a gunshot wound of head."

The widow filed her application for pension November 20, 1879, but it was rejected June 16, 1883. Cause of rejection not stated. That he died from the cause for which he was pensioned is very plain from the evidence of the physician who attended him.

Dr. John Hanenstein testifies that he is a regular practicing physician of thirty-five years' standing; that he has been the family physician of Christopher Hasenzahl for the past fourteen years; that he has prescribed for him during the time in cases of epileptic fits; that the immediate cause of his death was, in all probability, the frequency of the epilepsy, from attacks occurring as often as from one to four times during a night; that he attended him the last time on the 27th day of July, 1879, and found him with symptoms of congestion of the brain, developing into inflammation and consequent disorganization of that structure, and in the absence of any other cause adequate to produce these symptoms he is forced to the conclusion that epilepsy produced his death.

The committee think there is no question as to the merit of this case, or a reasonable doubt that the man died from the cause for which he was pensioned, or that his death was the result of wounds received in the service. The widow has four children under 16 years of age. She is entitled to a pension, and the committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: Strike out, in line 4, the words "rerate the pension" after the word "to," and insert the words "place on the pension-roll the name," and strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 7.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions were agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill as amended to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who introduced this bill.

Mr. MATSON. It was introduced by the gentleman from New York, Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. PERKINS. I think we will be doing this applicant an injustice by passing this bill. If I understood the report correctly as read, this pension can be secured at the Pension Office from the date of the death of the husband. It seems that the husband was granted a pension on the ground of epilepsy resulting from a wound received in the service, and there is no question from the evidence that he died from that injury. If the matter is pressed upon the Pension Bureau it seems to me there can be no doubt that the pension can be obtained there.

Mr. MATSON. I think the passage of this bill would not prevent the adjudication of the claim at the Pension Office.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. From the reading of the bill as introduced, it would appear that the gentleman introducing the bill had the idea that this woman was on the pension-roll, and the object of the bill is to rerate the pension.

Mr. MATSON. That is a mistake.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. She has never had a pension?

Mr. MATSON. She has not.

The bill as amended was then laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ROSE ANN GALBRAITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4818) for the relief of Rose Ann Galbraith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Rose Ann Galbraith, widow of John Galbraith, late a private in Company G, Seventh Regiment of Infantry, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 a month from and after the 12th day of December, 1872.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by inserting after the words "place on the pension-roll" the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" also by striking out at the end of the bill all after the words "United States Army."

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4818) for the relief of Rose Ann Galbraith, having considered the same, beg leave to make the following report:

John Galbraith, husband of the petitioner, enlisted in the service of the United States on the 11th day of January, 1855, and was assigned to Company G, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry. He is reported discharged November 11, 1859, at Camp Floyd, Utah, by re-enlistment in same company. The company was broken up and transferred to Company I, Seventh United States Infantry March 1, 1863.

Adjutant-General reports him deserted from furlough March 25, 1863; no apprehension and no record of death, and his furlough is not reported as sick furlough. The soldier died December 12, 1872. Widow filed application for pension June 6, 1878. This was rejected on the ground of desertion. It is shown that about the date at which he is charged with desertion he was at home prostrated with sickness. The claimant alleges her husband contracted consumption and came home sick and died of said disease.

The evidence to establish contraction of disease in service is not professional, but is that of an officer of the soldier's company, and is as follows:

Joseph H. Potter, being sworn, says:

"That he was captain of Company G, Seventh Regiment of Infantry, United States Regulars, at the inception of the disability of John Galbraith, who was a private of said company at that time; that he well remembers said Galbraith; that on or about the 4th day of July, 1862, while in the line of service, doing duty at Fort Fillmore New Mexico, guarding the fort, and subject to great exposure, he contracted inflammatory disease, which settled in his bones; he suffered very much indeed."

The evidence of the home physicians proves that the disease was progressive, and that it terminated in death, and that the time when he was treated on furlough corresponds with the date of the charge of desertion.

C. M. Zeh, M. D., says:

"I am a regular physician and surgeon, and have been engaged in active practice since October, 1848. Knew John Galbraith well previous to his entering the service of the United States as a soldier, and knew him to be a man in sound health. Was called to see him in the winter of 1863, soon after his return from the service, and found him entirely disabled, suffering from a disease of the lungs, which he informed me was the result of an attack of pneumonia from which he suffered while in the service and which was produced by cold from exposure and fatigue. His disease when he returned was of the nature of chronic pneumonia, and later of a tubercular character, which caused his death in December, 1872. I saw him from time to time from his return to Newark till his death and treated him as an indigent patient. Have no doubt that the disease of which he died was contracted while in the service of the Government."

James Elliott, M. D., being sworn, says:

"That he was well acquainted with John Galbraith, deceased, who was a corporal of Company G, Seventh Regiment United States Regular Infantry. That he was called to attend and prescribe for said Galbraith immediately after Charles M. Zeh, M. D., stopped attending him. That he continued his attendance until the day prior to his death. That the day preceding his death this deponent saw him. That said Galbraith's death was caused by phthisis, contracted by exposure while a soldier in the United States service, and that he died at 85 High street, Newark, N. J., December 12, 1872."

The committee think that the evidence establishes the fact that the soldier was regularly in the United States service, and that he contracted his disease while in said service. It also seems very plain that the charge of desertion arose from the soldier's being at home sick and not able to return to his company, and that he was treated as an indigent patient by the physician. They have come to the conclusion that the widow is entitled to a pension, and that she needs it for her support; and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: Insert after the word "pension-roll," in line 4, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and strike out all after the word "Army," in line 7.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions were agreed to.

The question was upon laying aside the bill as amended to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I did not catch distinctly the first part of the report as read. Did this soldier have leave of absence?

Mr. MATSON. I presume not.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then how did he get home?

Mr. MATSON. The report does not state whether he was on leave or not.

Mr. PETERS. The report states that he was home on furlough.

Mr. MATSON. It seems that the company to which he belonged was broken up and transferred to Company I, Seventh United States Infantry. At the date when he was charged with desertion he was at home prostrated with sickness.

Mr. PETERS. The next paragraph of the report states that, and he is reported as "deserted from furlough."

Mr. MATSON. He had evidently been furloughed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask a further question.

Mr. MATSON. Very well.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Did this soldier ever return to his command?

Mr. MATSON. I presume not, because he was evidently very sick.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. How long did he live afterward?

Mr. MATSON. He lived eight or nine years.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. He lived eight or nine years and never returned to his command?

Mr. MATSON. I can not state about that. It appears that he enlisted in 1855 and re-enlisted in 1859. I apprehend that his term of service had perhaps about expired when he was taken sick. He had been in the service then for a great many years.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not think we ought to pension the widow of a soldier who has deserted the service, who appears to be a deserter, without a fuller statement of the facts than we have here. It might be very true that at the time when he is marked as a deserter he was sick at home on furlough. But if he recovered from that sickness so as to be enabled to return to his command, it was his duty to have returned and obtained his discharge regularly from the service.

If he had done so he might have had this blot which rests upon his name removed. But there is no evidence that this soldier continued in a condition which rendered him unable to return to the service. So far as appears he may have recovered sufficiently to do so. I know enough about the service—about soldiers going home on furloughs——

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. MATSON. I discover from a more careful reading of the report that it shows this man was continuously treated by physicians from the time he returned home until he died. Certainly there is an excuse for his not returning to his command. He had been attacked with severe disease of the lungs. Dr. Zeh treated him for a long time, and immediately after Dr. Zeh stopped treating him Dr. Elliott began the treatment, which was continued until the man's death. The first physician began to treat him as soon as he returned home.

Mr. PETERS. There is another fact to be considered. The report states that the company to which this man belonged was broken up and transferred. This might account for the fact that he never returned to his company.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARGARET MADDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4178) granting a pension to Margaret Madden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Madden, of Long Island City, in the county of Queens, in the State of New York, widow of Christopher Madden, late a private in Company B of the Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month, and the allowance provided for minor children under 16 years of age, from and after the 10th day of August, A. D. 1866, the date of the death of her said husband.

The report (by Mr. BAGLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4178) granting a pension to Margaret Madden, having considered the same, submit the following report:

Christopher Madden was a private in Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, and received a gunshot wound of the leg which shattered the bone. This fact and his condition were clearly proven, and he was granted a pension of $8 per month. He died on the 10th day of August, 1866, at Brooklyn, N. Y., and the certificate of the board of health alleges that he died of cholera.

Soon after his death the widow, Margaret Madden, the petitioner, entered her claim for pension, but it was rejected on the ground that the cause of death, cholera, was not due to wounds received in the service.

Only one witness is brought forward to prove the contrary, that witness being the physician who attended the soldier from the time of his discharge from the Army till his death, and he swears positively that the wounds received were without question the cause of death. The following are the affidavits referred to:

Dr. Charles T. Chase testifies—

"That he is a practicing physician and surgeon, and resides in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y.; that he was well acquainted with Christopher Madden, late a private in Company B, of the Eighty-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteers, for the twenty years next preceding his death, and was his family physician for many years; that he attended and treated him from the time he returned home after his discharge from the Army to the time of his death; that he was suffering from a gunshot wound in the left leg just below the knee-joint; the tibia bone was badly shattered and splintered, which resulted in necrosis of that bone; there was great suppuration and a constant discharge, and occasional discharge of pieces of dead bone up to the time of his death. His health and system were destroyed by long-continued pain and the discharge from the wounded leg. He died in Brooklyn on the 10th day of August, 1866. His death resulted from a loss of vital power and a gradual breaking down of the whole system, caused by the long-continued suffering and pain produced by the wound in his leg."

In another affidavit made by the same physician, in addition to the statement substantially as the foregoing, he says:

"There can be no doubt as to the death of deceased having been hastened by constant and continued discharge of matter and pieces of bone from the leg, the tendency of which was to undermine the constitution and waste the vital powers of life."

Again, the same affiant says:

"That the death resulted from 'necrosis of bones of leg,' caused by gunshot wound received during the late war, and not from cholera or any other cause than that above stated, and that it is impossible for him, deponent, to understand how the information could have been given to the board of health that death was the result of cholera. The mistake might possibly have originated from the fact that cholera was quite prevalent at the time of said Christopher Madden's death."

The physician is of reputable character, and has practiced for many years. He seems to be very positive as to his facts and conclusions. Evidently there was a mistake made as to the cause of Madden's death. The evidence of cholera coming so directly from an official source, probably influenced the Pension Office adversely to the widow's claim. Your committee, however, think the attending physician, who had cared for the patient for years, ought to be the judge, and believe him competent to decide. So believing, they unhesitatingly recommend the passage of the bill with this amendment: Strike out from the bill all after the word "volunteers" in line 8.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out at the end of the bill all after the word "volunteers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, before this amendment is voted on, I wish to say a word. Of course we understand it is now the policy of Congress in granting pensions these in cases to refuse to allow the pension to take effect from the time the disability was incurred, or in the case of a widow from the time of the death of her husband. But, sir, if a person is entitled to a pension to-night on account of certain facts which are presented to the consideration of Congress, that person is entitled to the pension from the time those facts began to run. I want to enter my protest against the method of dealing with these people.

If it is competent for Congress to readjust the equities in regard to grants of land, and bestow millions of acres or millions of dollars upon A, B, C, or D, the corporate suitors before this court of the people, I submit that, if in the application of a rule of law you to-night bestow a pension on this claimant, you should make that pension coextensive with the facts, and allow the pension to extend back to such time as will do absolute justice to the claimant.

Mr. MATSON. In reply to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] I wish to say that this question of allowing pensions granted under special acts to date back has been discussed time and again. The difficulty is that Congress long ago established the rule that pensions granted by special acts should operate only from the date of the passage of the act. To begin now to date back such pensions would, I submit to the gentleman, do injustice as between the different persons receiving these pensions. But in order that the gentleman may be satisfied with this proposition, I will state to him that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has directed a bill to be reported—I am not sure but that it has been reported—establishing a general law on this subject, so that all who receive pensions by special act may receive them from the date of the disability, or from the death of the soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WOLFORD. Before the vote is taken upon that question I wish to say a word. I am and have been dissatisfied in the particular pointed out by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], with the injustice that is being done to every widow receiving a pension by special act. I tried to make myself understood on this subject the other night; but now the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON] has stated that the reason for perpetrating this injustice is because years ago the Congress of the United States did wrong. That is the meaning of his statement, otherwise he would not be in favor of a general bill which he says his committee has agreed to report.

In these matters Congress is sovereign; it has the right to do what is right. It is bound not to follow but to disregard any precedent which is wrong or unjust. Are we, representing the great people of the United States, to follow former Congresses in doing what was wrong? There would, in my humble judgment, be propriety in saying that as a past Congress has done right we ought to follow in its wake. But when Congress in the past has done wrong, are we, in Heaven's name, to say, "We, representing the people and speaking for the people, are going to do wrong forever because a Congress years ago did wrong?" Is any member justified in saying, "Unless I can procure the passage of a general law I will do wrong in every case that comes here because a former Congress has done wrong?"

I enter my protest against such a doctrine as that, a doctrine which would teach us to follow forever bad examples and never to follow good ones. I do not believe in following the bad examples of any man or any Congress. The good examples of any man or any Congress ought to be followed. Virtue exalts a nation, but wrong and iniquity are a disgrace to any people.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to correct an erroneous impression as to the application of the law in this case. This widow would be entitled to her pension from the date of the death of her husband if she could furnish evidence to the Pension Office that the death was the result of the disability for which he was pensioned. The object, as I understand, of the special act is to relieve that difficulty.

Now, we assume in passing a special act the widow is not entitled to a pension under the general law. Under a special act it is for Congress to say when that pension shall begin. The chairman of the committee has already said that by passing a bill like this you do not cut off the right of the widow to prosecute her claim at the Pension Office, and get her pension from date of the death of her husband. I myself am in favor of a general law that will continue the pension the husband was receiving to the widow during her life or widowhood. I think there is a defect there in the general law. I think the House is right in all cases where it affords relief by special act in commencing that relief from the date of the act. If there are any rights they are not cut off, but exist to be prosecuted under the general law.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The passage of a special act putting a widow or soldier on the pension-roll does not preclude the widow or soldier from prosecuting his or her claim under the general law. If this widow filed her claim prior to the time the arrears of pension were debarred under the general law the passing of this act does not preclude her from prosecuting that claim under the general law, providing she can prove what is necessary to prove under the law to put her on the pension-roll. She comes here though and asks us that we shall grant her a special favor—a matter of grace and not a matter of right. I believe no soldier or widow can come to Congress and demand as matter of right any special legislation in his or her favor. The soldier who was wounded, or the widow of the soldier who died from wounds, or who was killed in the service, has a right to a pension under the general law, and as a matter of right can demand it. It is a legal claim under the law to-day, and if it can be proved they have a claim it is the duty of the Commissioner to grant it under the law. But no soldier or widow has the right to demand as a matter of right any special act in his or her behalf. Hence, sir, there is a broad distinction.

Mr. WOLFORD. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLFORD. I should like the gentleman from Alabama to tell me in this case whether it is a question of the claimant demanding a right or of Congress doing what is right and proper under the circumstances? It is Congress here that is passing this law, and I should like to know whether Congress is right in refusing her a pension if she has a case which entitles her to it? It seems to me to be a question whether Congress is doing right in refusing it to her.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Congress has done all that any soldier or widow of a soldier has the right to demand at its hands. We have passed a general act which I approve and which I believe ought to be in the interest of soldiers and the widows of soldiers. I will say further, sir, that I do not believe in the administration of the law; I do not believe soldiers and the widows of soldiers always get justice from the Pension Office. You must remember, however, before you blame the Commissioner of Pensions or the Pension Office, that it is necessary they shall watch closely all these applications for pension. There is a duty they owe to honest and good soldiers and to the tax-payers of this country to see that no fraudulent claim is granted. As these claims are proved by ex parte evidence, by witnesses who are not cross-examined, by affidavits drawn by the attorneys of the applicants without cross-examination on the part of the Government, you see how easy it is for fraudulent claimants to get on the pension-rolls.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Is the gentleman opposed to the passage of this bill?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am not opposed to the passage of the bill, but I am discussing a question raised by others and not by myself. [Cries of "Vote!"] I will talk a little while longer. I have the floor and intend to hold it a little longer. I do not intend, so far as I am concerned, it shall go out that I am in favor, and I do not believe any one of you would be in favor, of passing a general law where you have to put soldiers, or the widows of soldiers, on the pension-rolls by special act, that the pension in those cases shall relate back to the time of the discharge of the soldier.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to call your attention to one feature of this case that seems to have been overlooked in the discussion. There is involved in this case a question of fact which was decided a certain way by the Pension Department, and that was as to whether the death of this soldier was the result of wounds or sickness. The Pension Department, upon evidence before it, decided that his death was caused by cholera, and this is in the nature of an appeal from the decision of the Pension Department. I ask the gentleman from Alabama, then, looking at all the facts and evidence here set forth in the report, whether he would not reasonably come to the conclusion that death was caused by wounds rather than by the cholera, and whether he would not therefore support the appeal rather than the decision of the Department?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I will answer the gentleman from Kansas by saying that if this witness had been examined and cross-examined and all of the facts elicited upon both sides of the question, and he was a credible witness, and the facts had been elicited as I have said on a full cross-examination, I would say undoubtedly that the soldier died from the wounds that he received and not from the cholera.

Mr. WOLFORD. Well, the report says so, does it not?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. But I hold further that the Pension Bureau has better facilities for examining testimony and determining questions of this kind than any committee of Congress can possibly have, and therefore that it is unsafe except in cases where the testimony is very conclusive to overrule a decision of the Department upon such a point.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to occupy the time of the committee, but I want to take a moment only to enter my earnest protest against the opinion, every once in a while expressed here, that there is a lot of fraudulent cases of pensions gotten through in this country by some action in the Pension Department. I wish to say that after a very careful study of the matter for five years on this subject—and I have stated it before among the people—I believe that there are twenty soldiers in the United States that ought to be pensioned, and who can not get their pensions because they can not make the technical proof required by the law, where there is one or near one who gets what he ought not to have from the Pension Department.

Mr. WOLFORD. That is my experience exactly.

Mr. HORR. And I believe we ought to treat cases of this character leniently in every respect, and give them the full benefit of the doubt. I believe the law ought to be so that when a man can show his enlistment that ought to be sufficient, and the Government ought to be estopped from denying that the man was not sound when he went into the service. In fact it ought to be fixed by law exactly to the contrary, and the man ought not to be required to prove anything of the kind. The fact of his enlistment ought to be ample proof.

Mr. WOLFORD. I certainly agree with you.

Mr. HORR. I would go even further than that and pass a law giving every disabled soldier to-day—no matter where he got his disability, if he was totally disabled—a pension and put him on the pension-roll at once, without further proof except the mere fact that he was a soldier. But we hear this declaration made constantly that the Pension Department is granting pensions that ought not to be given.

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman from Michigan will yield to me for a moment, as I want to save the time of the committee and proceed with the consideration of other cases, I will take the liberty of stating to him that the Committee on Invalid Pensions will report a bill which will meet his views exactly. I make this statement with a view of getting a vote at once upon this bill.

Mr. HORR. I admit that this is talking against business, and I regret to have to do it. But if the gentleman from Alabama will keep his seat for the rest of the evening I will. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

P. W. BRADBURY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 875) granting a pension to P. W. Bradbury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to place the name of P. W. Bradbury, of Saint Louis, Mo., and formerly connected with the command of General John C. Frémont as a scout, on the pension-list, at the rate of $20 a month.

The report (by Mr. FYAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 875) granting a pension to Dr. P. W. Bradbury, of Saint Louis, Mo., submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence of Maj. Gen. John C. Frémont that while he was in command of the Department of Western Virginia, in 1862, Dr. P. W. Bradbury served as a scout under his command; that during his service he was frequently assigned to special duty, which he performed bravely and faithfully; that in the execution of his duty he received a serious injury, from which he has not recovered, and which, together with the hardships of the service in which he was engaged, has prevented him from gaining a competence in the practice of his profession.

J. C. Hardaway swears that he had personal knowledge of the facts set forth in the petition of Dr. P. W. Bradbury, and was with him in West Virginia at the time mentioned in his petition, when his injuries were received in the line of duty; that the nature of the service involved great hardship and risk, and called for skill, judgment, and bravery of the highest order.

Dr. Bradbury, in his petition, states that in May, 1862, while engaged in the discharge of his duty as a scout, he suffered an injury to his shoulder under the following circumstances: The detachment had halted to feed, and he was left on guard over the horses at a log stable in which they were placed; he went up into the loft to look for feed; it was at night, and dark; the floor of the loft was made of round poles; he slipped and fell upon his right shoulder, receiving thereby an injury which became permanent; for five days and nights thereafter he was in the saddle nearly all the time, as the enemy obliged him to keep moving; that he has never been well since, although before that time he had enjoyed excellent health. He says that he has spent much money in trying to recover his health; that he is growing steadily worse all the time, and is unable to attend to the duties of his profession.

William Henly testifies that he served with Dr. Bradbury as a scout in Western Virginia in 1862, under the command of Maj. Gen. Frémont, and was with him on the trip during which he received the injury; that they were within the enemy's lines and had to keep in the saddle for five days and nights, and knows of Dr. Bradbury receiving the injury in the manner in which he states it. Henly was captain in the service and aid-de-camp to General Frank P. Blair, commanding the Seventeenth Army Corps.

C. C. Carpenter testifies that he was chief of scouts under the command of General Frémont in 1862; that he regarded Dr. Bradbury as one of the best scouts in the service; that he was with him at the time he received the injury and knows the facts stated by him in his petition to be true; that they were fearfully exposed during that trip; that they were outside of their own lines for five days and nights, and nearly the whole time in the saddle; that he has known him since, and believes he has never recovered from the injury; that he served well in the most dangerous branch of the service, and that his claim is a just one.

There is also evidence of physicians showing the condition of Dr. Bradbury and the effect of the injury received. Your committee think he ought to be put on the pension-roll at $20 per month, and report a bill to that effect and recommend its passage, and that the bill be amended by striking out all after the words "pension-list," in sixth line, and adding the words "at the rate of $20 per month."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the committee have departed in this case, as I think they have, from the rule which I understand to have been adopted of leaving the question of rating in each case of special pensions to the Department. I think that is important. I do not think that Congress ought to undertake to rate the pension, but that having provided for a pension they should leave the rating to the Department, to be governed by the same rules and in the same way that the other pensions are determined. Let the rating be determined in the same way that pensions are determined under the general law. In no other way can we have anything like uniformity in the ratings. Whether this man is entitled to $20 or $15 or $30 I do not pretend to say or know, but I do not think a committee of this House or the House itself ought to undertake in any case to determine that, but after having granted the pension should then leave it, so far as the rating is concerned, to the medical board, which is certainly a much more capable body to determine that question than this.

Mr. MATSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to interrupt him for the purpose of saving time? It is absolutely necessary, as we understand the law, to fix the rating in this particular case, for there is no rating for a scout.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No rating for a scout?

Mr. MATSON. No, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then he was not a commissioned officer?

Mr. MATSON. No.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understood that he was. Under the circumstances, then, in view of that explanation, I have no objection to the bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

OCTAVIA A. NEWHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5330) granting a pension to Octavia A. Newhall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Octavia A. Newhall, widow of Everett Newhall, late a private in the Fifth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, Company F.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

Octavia A. Newhall is the widow of Everett Newhall, late a corporal of Company F, Fifth Massachusetts Infantry. He enlisted September 22, 1862, and was discharged July 2, 1863. He contracted swamp or malarial fever during his term of service at New Berne, N. C., from the effects of which he never recovered. He died November 26, 1882, of blood-poisoning. He was in robust health at and prior to his enlistment, as shown by the evidence in the case, and it is also shown that he never enjoyed good health after his return. Although much broken in health and enfeebled, he was able in these years to do light wood-work or turning, at which employment, in 1882, he cut one of his fingers with a circular saw, making amputation necessary. Aside from the pain at the time nothing more serious was thought of. His blood being in a poor and impoverished condition, from the effects of malaria contracted in the service, as shown by his never thereafter having been free from attacks of chills and fever, blood-poisoning ensued of a most serious character. He was removed to the Massachusetts General Hospital for treatment, where he died in great agony and pain. The evidence in this case is as follows:

Dr. William Ingalls, late surgeon of Fifth Massachusetts Regiment, says he remembers soldier as one of five who were especially sick and helpless on trip from New Berne to Boston, but has no further record in the case.

Charles Currier says he was the captain of soldier's company; that about April 1, 1863, he was taken sick with malarial fever and remained sick until July 3, 1863, when the company returned to Massachusetts. Soldier had to be carried on a stretcher from hospital to boat, and that he was in perfect health at enlistment.

Comrades Tay and Oliver, members of soldier's company, say he was a well, strong man at and prior to his enlistment; that he contracted swamp fever in North Carolina, while in line of duty, from the effects of which he never afterwards recovered.

Daniel W. Lawrence, treasurer Medford Savings Bank, states that from 1850 to the time of his enlistment soldier was a strong, robust man. Next saw him in hospital at New Berne, N. C., entirely broken down in health, from the effects of which he never afterward recovered.

William Lawrence states he had known soldier for years, and he was a strong, robust man prior to enlistment. After returning from service he was always poor in health and much disabled for work by malarial attacks.

Thomas Bisbee, soldier's employer, states: He was not in good health and was unable to earn the wages of a robust man, and could not, owing to his disease, earn sufficient to properly support his family.

Dr. Martin, of Medford, Mass., states: Known soldier for fourteen years; had treated him for chills and fever, which soldier informed him he had had ever since he was in the Army. Soldier died of blood poisoning. Affiant further states that soldier never fully recovered from malaria contracted in the Army.

Dr. George W. West says Newhall came under his care at the Massachusetts General Hospital in September, 1882, at which time his appearance indicated poor health, a general anæmic character. He complained of poor health dating back to service in the Army. That in spite of all that was done his hand grew worse, a severe abscess forming with pus running up his arm. His death was due to his poor condition at the time of his injury.

His widow applied for a pension. Her claim was rejected on the ground that "origin of fatal injury was after discharge."

Your committee are of opinion that the facts show a certain condition which under the circumstances contributed to, if not induced, his death; that his blood was in an unhealthy condition at the time of the injury to his finger, occasioned by the malarial poison which he had absorbed into his system at the time of his service in the Army, and which had so undermined and weakened his constitution that it induced the unfavorable condition which resulted in his death.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BETSEY A. MOWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 137) for the relief of Betsey A. Mower.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Betsey A. Mower, and rate her pension at $50 per month.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

Add at the end of the bill the following: "which shall be in lieu of the pension she now receives."

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

This claim was favorably reported to the Forty-seventh Congress, which report is as follows, and is adopted by your committee:

Betsy A. Mower is the widow of the late Maj. Gen. Joseph A. Mower, who died January 6, 1870, while in command of the Department of Louisiana.

General Mower was commissioned second lieutenant, United States Army, June 18, 1855. At the outbreak of the late war he held the rank of first lieutenant in said service, and for gallant and meritorious service he was rapidly promoted until August 12, 1864, he attained the rank of major-general. He was in many battles, and was distinguished for his great courage and efficiency. His military record furnished by the War Department is too long to incorporate in this report; but for long, continuous, and efficient service of high rank and fidelity to the Government in time of need he had but few, if any, superiors.

It appears that, since the death of her husband, the claimant has received a pension of $30 per month. It is also alleged that she is in reduced circumstances, and that the above amount is insufficient to support herself and dependent children.

In view of the distinguished military services of the claimant's husband, and of her necessitous circumstances, your committee recommend that her pension be increased to $50 per month, and that the bill pass, amended by adding the words "which shall be in lieu of the pension she now receives."

The amendment reported by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH A. BARBOUR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3694) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Barbour.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Elizabeth A. Barbour, widow of James E. Barbour, late hospital-steward of the Twenty-first Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the laws relating to pensions.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

Strike out the words "of the laws relating to pensions" and insert "and limitations of the pension laws."

The Clerk commenced to read the report. Before he had concluded the reading,

Mr. STEELE said: I ask that the reading of the remainder of the report be dispensed with. I think the case is made out by what has already been read. At the same time I ask that the whole of the report be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) in full is as follows:

This bill was introduced in the Senate of the United States at its present session, and was referred to the Committee on Pensions, from which the following favorable report was made by Hon. Mr. BLAIR, and which, after an examination of all the facts, this committee adopt as its own, namely:

The claimant, Elizabeth A. Barbour, is the widow of James E. Barbour, late hospital steward of the Twenty-first Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers. He enlisted August 8, 1862; was discharged May 6, 1863, and died December 7, 1879. The soldier never filed any application for a pension, but the widow filed one in her own name May 14, 1881, which was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the cause of soldier's death was not due to or connected with the service.

It appears of record that Barbour was sent to the general hospital in Washington, February 8, 1863, with typhoid fever; was furloughed March 20, 1863; returned April 29, 1863, and was discharged a week later "by reason of promotion to assistant surgeon United States Navy." It also appears of record that he served as such assistant surgeon from May 31, 1863, to March 12, 1864. This is the extent of the record evidence.

Dr. William Soule, formerly surgeon of Barbour's regiment, testifies as follows:

"I was acquainted with James E. Barbour, hospital steward. He was an active and faithful steward, and so competent in dispensing and prescribing medicines that when my first assistant was disabled and short of help I was compelled to put upon Barbour many additional duties, until he became exhausted and contracted a severe fever, which brought him very low and necessitated his removal to hospital near Aquia Creek. He contracted this fever in the month of January, 1863; and when I left the service, February 24, he had not recovered. I saw him after he was able to come to Connecticut on sick leave, about the last of March, 1863, I think, and was convinced that his physical constitution had suffered more than is ordinary from fever, so much so that there was just cause to fear he would never recover his former state of health."

The claimant alleges soldier contracted fever near Fredericksburg, Va., and was sent to hospital near Aquia Creek in December, 1862. This is corroborated by two comrades, who say:

"He was taken sick about December, 1862, with fever, the result of overexertion, and was entirely disabled from duty."

As to his condition after leaving the service, the affidavit of Mrs. Sarah M. Fitch states:

"Dr. James E. Barbour, upon his return from the service of the United States in 1864, I think in the early summer, came immediately to my house and remained there until January, 1865. He then went to Norwalk, six miles distant, where I saw him frequently until shortly before his death. When he came to my house he was very feeble and unable to exert himself. He was entirely unable to perform any manual labor. He then and always claimed he was very sick while in the service, came near dying, and that his weakness was the result of that sickness. I do not now remember just what disease he had, but he was generally debilitated and obliged to exercise the greatest caution in respect to exerting himself. He always attended my family from that time until his death. In March, 1865, I sent for him to attend my daughter, who was very ill, and he at that time remained at my house a week because he was not able to go to Norwalk and return. He appeared to me to be troubled in the same way during all the time from his return to his death, and he had no other acute disease that I know of but a wearing out of the system."

This is corroborated by another witness, at whose house he was a frequent visitor, who also states:

"Immediately after his return he was very feeble, utterly unable to perform any manual labor at all, and continued to be weak and feeble till his death; his system was broken down."

Dr. William A. Lockwood, of Norwalk, knew Barbour and treated him. He states he first discovered organic disease of heart in 1867; that he also suffered from rheumatism, and his constitution seemed to be impaired and weakened; that he suffered from extreme debility, with periodical prostration. Dr. Lynes, who treated him before that, is dead.

The soldier died in Italy, and the Italian physician states his heart was a long time affected; that death was the consequence of a serious ulceration of the liver; that commencement of softening of the brain hastened the end, and that he died from general consumption and infection.

Upon this showing the Pension Bureau rejected the claim on the ground that there was no reasonable pathological connection between the fever in the service and any of the diseases of which he died. The Commissioner of Pensions, however, in a letter, under date of December 14, 1883, which has been filed with this committee, states as follows:

"Inasmuch as his physical energies were impaired by the service, and his ability to accumulate property for the care of his family were decreased thereby, it may be that the equities of the case are such as to commend the case of the widow to the favorable consideration of Congress."

The affidavit of A. H. Byington, clerk of the Senate Committee on Patents, who was a neighbor of the soldier, has been filed, in which he states that he knew him as a young man of robust health before entering the service; saw him many times at the front in the Army of the Potomac, at which time Barbour attributed his severe illness to overwork and exposure; and that he saw him frequently after his return home, after which time he was constantly under medical care. He states that from his own medical knowledge and intimate acquaintance with Barbour, and from the statements frequently made to him by Dr. Lynes, that he can positively affirm that he was a perfectly sound man on entering the service, and that he never saw a well day subsequent to his discharge.

Your committee are of the opinion that it has been fairly established that this claimant's husband entered the service of the United States a sound and healthy young man, and that he left it in a debilitated and broken-down condition, as a result of such service; that this gradually grew worse until he died in a foreign country, where he had been sent by the charity of friends in hope of relief. They are not, therefore, disposed to insist upon a technical pathological connection being proved between the disease of record in the service and the several immediate causes of death. Letters and statements of credible persons, going to show that this is a meritorious claim, and is so considered by the community in which the soldier resided, are before the committee; and in view of all the facts it is recommended that the bill do pass, with the following amendment:

"Strike out all after the word 'provisions,' in the seventh line, and insert the words 'and limitations of the pension laws.'"

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 689) which is now on the Calendar, and which is identical with this bill as proposed to be amended by the committee, be taken up in lieu of the House bill, and that the House bill be laid aside to be reported with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 689) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Barbour was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and the bill H. R. 3694 was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

ANN CORNELIA LANMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1813) granting an increase of pension to Ann Cornelia Lanman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Cornelia Lanman, and pay her a pension of $50 a month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The Clerk commenced to read the report.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask that the reading of the remainder of the report be dispensed with. This is one of the class of cases on which we have been passing favorably heretofore. Not one of them has ever been refused.

Mr. STEELE. It passed the Forty-seventh Congress and has passed the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the further reading of the report will be dispensed with and it will be printed in full in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) is as follows:

This bill was reported favorably upon in the Forty-seventh Congress from the Senate Committee on Pensions, which report we adopt as our own:

Admiral Lanman entered the naval service of the United States as a midshipman January 1, 1825, and passed through all the grades of the service up to rear-admiral. He served during the late war, and distinguished himself at the attack on Fort Fisher under Admiral Porter. Admiral Lanman was officially recognized for gallant service throughout the war. In 1869 he was promoted to be a rear-admiral and placed in command of the South Atlantic fleet, where he served three years. On his return from this command he was placed on the retired-list.

On the 20th of February, 1874, he received a telegram from Secretary of Navy Robeson to report at Washington, D. C., as a witness. The order was received by him at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and he left for Washington the same evening. On that journey he contracted a very severe cold, and when he reached home he was scarcely able to walk. He immediately took to his bed, and grew worse until the 13th of March, 1874, when he died. The physician who attended him in his last sickness swears that he died of pneumonia, contracted during his journey to Washington as above stated.

The evidence shows that Rear-Admiral Lanman left a widow, the present claimant, and two minor children, to wit, Alice Blanche and Rosalie Decatur, aged, respectively, 12 and 14.

A pension of $30 a month was granted to Mrs. Lanman by special act of Congress. This was the pension allowed by law at that time in the cases of the widows of admirals, so that the special act gave Mrs. Lanman the full benefit of the law at that time. Now she petitions Congress to increase the pension allowed her to $50 per month, on the ground that her present pension is inadequate to the support of herself and her children.

In connection with this petition for an increase of pension, it is pertinent to inquire into the equity which has governed the committee's action in similar cases.

By the pension law, as it existed prior to the act of July 14, 1862, the pensions granted to officers of the Navy, and to their widows and minor children, in case of death, were made equal to the half-monthly pay of such officers, such pay as existed in 1835, which forms the basis upon which such pensions were granted. These pensions were payable from the interest of the naval pension fund. By this law rear-admirals, their widows, &c., received a pension of $50 a month.

The act of July 14, 1862, established pensions for the Army and Navy according to rank, making Navy pensions correspond with Army pensions. By this act of July 14, 1862, the pension granted to rear-admirals was reduced to $30 a month. The act of July 14, 1862, was construed as affecting only pensions which should be granted after the passage of said act.

Section 3 of the act of July 25, 1866, provided—

"That the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 14, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, are hereby, so far as applicable, extended to the pensioners under previous laws, except Revolutionary pensions."

In applying this act no reduction of the naval pensions previously granted was made.

Section 13 of the act of July 27, 1868, provided—

"That the third section of 'An act increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes,' approved July 25, 1866, shall be so construed as to place all pensioners whose right thereto accrued subsequently to the war of the Revolution and prior to the 4th of March, 1861, on the same footing as to rate of pension from and after the passage of said act as those who have been pensioned under acts passed since said 4th day of March, 1861, and the widows of Revolutionary soldiers and sailors now receiving a less sum shall hereafter be paid at the rate of $8 per month."

Under this act, upon the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, naval pensions already granted were reduced to the rates provided in the act of July 14, 1862, such reduction taking effect from the last half-yearly payment made prior to February 10, 1870, the date of the decision.

This decision gave rise to the passage of the act approved June 9, 1880, entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," which provides—

"That section 3 of an act entitled 'An act increasing the pension of widows and orphans, and for other purposes,' approved July 25, 1866, and section 13 of an act entitled 'An act relating to pensions,' approved July 27, 1868, and section 4712 of the Revised Statutes shall not operate to reduce the rate of any pension, which had actually been allowed, to the commissioned, non-commissioned, or petty officers of the Navy, or their widows, or minor children prior to the 25th day of July, 1866; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to restore all such pensioners as have already been so reduced to the rate originally granted and allowed, to take effect from the date of such reduction."

Under this act such pensioners as had been reduced under the decision rendered by the Secretary of the Interior, February 10, 1870, were restored to their original rate of pension.

All those widows, &c., of rear-admirals who have applied for a pension since the rendering of the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, February 10, 1870, have only been granted a pension of $30 per month, which presents the inconsistency of a portion of rear-admirals' widows receiving $50, while the balance are pensioned at $30 a month without difference of rank, merit, or long service. Since the restoration of this class of pensions to $50 per month by the act of June 9, 1880, the widows who are allowed but $30 per month at the Pension Office under the act of July 14, 1862, have from time to time applied to Congress for an increase of pension from $30 to $50, and for original pensions of $50 per month, and such increase, or original granting of pensions at $50 per month, has frequently occurred during the present session of Congress. (See Mr. Teller's report, Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough; Mr. Jackson's report, Louisa Bainbridge Hoff; Mr. Platt's report, Rebecca Reynolds; Mr. Platt's report, Elizabeth H. Spotts.)

Some of these cases are for long and meritorious services, and for original pension; others for an increase from the $30 allowed by the Pension Office to $50. In the report of the case of Admiral Goldsborough, where it is not alleged that he died of any disease contracted in the line of duty, or even in the service, the concluding clause in the Goldsborough case is as follows:

"Such a record of service, in the opinion of the committee, justifies the payment to his widow of the same pension allowed in other cases by special act of Congress to the widows of other officers of the Navy of similar rank. The committee therefore recommend that Senate bill 743 be passed."

That concluding clause is open to but one conclusion, to wit, that Mrs. Goldsborough's pension was a gratuity pension for the long and meritorious services of her husband.

Regarding any objection being raised to the granting of a pension to Rear-Admiral Lanman's widow on the ground that he was on the retired-list, it is proper to say that Admiral Goldsborough was retired in 1874 and died in 1879, and Admiral Hoff was retired in 1869 and died in 1878. Therefore they were both on the retired-list at the time of their death.

Now, the widow of Rear-Admiral Lanman is entitled to a pension to a greater extent than the widow of an admiral whose only claim was long and meritorious services, as her husband died directly from a malady contracted in obeying an order of the Secretary of the Navy, and within a few days after contracting the disease.

The $30 pension granted by special act was acceptable to Mrs. Lanman until others of no greater merit were increased to $50. The inconsistency of her receiving but $30 became apparent, and no reason prevailing why her case should be an exceptional one, she thought it proper to ask Congress by a special act to remove this inconsistency.

Inasmuch as the Forty-sixth Congress thought proper to increase certain cases of the widows of admirals to $50 (see Lelia E. McCauley, p. 609, Stats. at Large, 1879-'81, and Ann M. Paulding, 608, Stats. at Large, 1879-'81), and have frequently seen fit since to grant the same pension in similar cases, your committee can see no good reason why Mrs. Lanman should not receive a like pension, and therefore report a bill to that effect, and recommend its passage.

Mr. WAIT. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether the Senate bill in this case has passed this session.

Mr. MATSON. It may have passed the Senate, but is not on our Calendar. It may be on the Speaker's table, but we have no power to act upon it under the order of the House unless it be on the Calendar.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

REBECCA WALCOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2987) granting a pension to Rebecca Walcott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca Walcott, mother of James A. Walcott, late a corporal of Company E, Second Vermont Volunteers.

The following amendments were reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

In line 4, strike out the words "place on," and insert in lieu thereof the words "restore to."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill restoring Rebecca Walcott to the pension-roll."

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

Rebecca Walcott is the mother of James A. Walcott, corporal Company E, Second Vermont Volunteers, who enlisted at the breaking out of the war of the rebellion; in December, 1863, he re-enlisted into the same regiment as a veteran volunteer, serving until August 21, 1864, at which time he was killed in action at Charlestown, Va., his total service at the time he was killed being three years three months. Rebecca Walcott was placed upon the pension-roll as a dependent mother, at $8 per month, from August 24, 1864, payment on which was continued to April 25, 1870, at which time she was dropped from the roll on charge of "non-dependence on the son." The circumstances which led to the dropping of Mrs. Walcott from the roll were as follows:

James Walcott, father of James A. and husband of Rebecca, paid Jason L. Fowler, a son-in-law, in February, 1866—who being without means and desiring to purchase a farm—the sum of $2,000, of which he was then possessed, in consideration of which Walcott took a bond, secured by a second mortgage on the Fowler farm, therein binding himself for the life-support of Walcott and his wife, the price paid for the farm being $4,000—a war price. Fowler, being unfortunate, could not keep up his payments. The first mortgage was foreclosed and the farm was sold at less than the face of the first mortgage, and Fowler was ousted, losing the $2,000 borrowed of Walcott besides other money which he had paid in toward the debt. James Walcott, the father, died in 1872, leaving Mrs. Walcott entirely alone and dependent.

Fowler, having in the mean time become discouraged at his losses, and having no trade, was in such condition that he could not earn a support for his wife and three children, and of necessity Mrs. Walcott could not be supported by him, and is now in her seventy-ninth year, left to her own resources. She applied for reinstatement on the pension-roll, filing new evidence as to her condition of dependence. Her claim was rejected, the reasons given being "papers recently filed do not change status." Mrs. Walcott bitterly feels in her old age the need of a son who, had he lived—but whose life she gave to her country—would have been her prop and natural supporter in her declining years. Your committee, in view of all the circumstances, the extreme age and present absolute dependence of Mrs. Walcott, do therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill with an amendment:

Strike out, in the fourth line, the words "to place on," and substitute therefor the words "restore to;" and amend the title of the bill so it shall read "A bill restoring Rebecca Walcott to the pension-roll."

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to move another amendment. It seems this lady was dropped from the roll some ten years ago. If she is restored by this special act the law may be so construed as to entitle her to a pension from the time she was dropped, so as to give her arrears of pension. As we have uniformly refused to give arrears of pension in other cases, I think it should not be done in this case. I move to amend by adding the words "and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. WOLFORD. I want the Clerk to again read from the report the statement as to how old this lady is; and when that is read I think the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. STEELE. She is in her seventy-ninth year.

Mr. WOLFORD. She ought to have her pension from the time she was dropped from the roll.

Mr. HOUK. I apprehend the bill will have the effect of giving this old lady her pension back to the time she was dropped from the roll. But I desire to say that it is just what this Congress ought to be willing to do. If she was wrongfully dropped she ought to be restored. She ought to have her rights and ought to be placed on the roll with the right to recover every dollar she would have received if she had not been dropped from it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I beg to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this report does not go upon the idea that she was wrongfully dropped. The report does not say that. But it says, owing to her age and extreme dependence now we are in favor of restoring her to the pension-roll.

Mr. HOUK. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his amendment and we will pass the bill. I think the gentleman ought to comply with his contract with the gentleman from Michigan. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FANNIE S. BEAUMONT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 747) granting a pension to Fannie S. Beaumont.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie S. Beaumont, widow of John C. Beaumont, late an admiral in the Navy of the United States, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month; said pension to be in lieu of that she now receives.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 747) granting a pension to Fannie C. Beaumont, have considered the same, and respectfully submit the following report, which report was made by a majority of the Senate Committee on Pensions in the Forty-seventh Congress:

The claimant is the widow of the late Rear-Admiral John C. Beaumont, who died August 2, 1882, after an active service of nearly fifty-four years.

In view of the long and distinguished services of Rear-Admiral Beaumont, and also in view of the fact that in many instances the pensions of widows of rear-admirals have been increased to $50 by special acts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CLARK ROBERTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1894) granting a pension to Clark Roberts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Clark Roberts, who was lately the surgeon of the One hundred and first Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by adding the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The report (by Mr. CULLEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1894) granting a pension to Clark Roberts, having considered the evidence in the case, beg leave to report:

That during the month of April, 1862, Clark Roberts was a practicing physician at Winchester, Scott County, Illinois. That immediately after the battle of Shiloh, April 6 and 7, 1862, by direction of Richard Yates, then governor of Illinois, Dr. Roberts accompanied a number of surgeons, in charge of Dr. Brainard, of Chicago, Ill., to Shiloh, to care for the sick and wounded Federal soldiers of the Army encamped in that vicinity, where he rendered faithful and efficient service in his professional treatment of the large number of suffering soldiers. That by reason of the incessant labor and exposure he was attacked with influenza of great severity, which "invaded the throat, posterior Noris and Eustachian tubes to the middle ear;" that he was treated by Dr. Brainard for said affection. That he so far recovered as to be able to return home, where he was confined to his room for several days, when he regained his health sufficiently to attend to his professional services, but the disease left him a constant roaring sound in the head, from which he never recovered.

That on the 18th of December, 1862, he was mustered into the military service of the United States as surgeon of the One hundred and first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and served with his regiment during the operation of the army in front of Vicksburg and Chattanooga. During said service he was frequently attacked with fever nepthralgia, and by reason of his failing health was finally compelled to and did resign, on the 28th day of March, 1864.

Alonzo M. Kinber, assistant surgeon One hundred and first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in a certificate upon which the resignation of Dr. Roberts was grounded, says:

"I do hereby certify that I have carefully examined said officer and find him unfit for active field service by reason of his age (being near 59 years old) and its consequent infirmities. His hearing has been and is still failing him, greatly to his inconvenience as an officer in the service. He is suffering from chronic inflammation of the ureters, produced and kept up by the occasional passage of renal calculi. He is also suffering at this time from an intermitting form of fever, which, in connection with his other ailment, must, in my opinion, result in permanent disability or premature demise, unless prevented by a withdrawal from the service and a return to the quiet of civil life. This certificate is given with the approval of Surgeon Mathews, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Infantry, and Assistant Surgeon Myers, Eighty-second Ohio Infantry, after personal examination of said officer."

David Prince, M. D., says he knew claimant prior to enlistment, and he was in good health and had good hearing.

Charles H. Fox, colonel One hundred and first Illinois Volunteers, says when regiment was stationed at Union City, Tenn., in July, August, and September, 1863, Dr. Clark Roberts came to him for duty as surgeon, and at that time he was slightly deaf; said his deafness had been contracted in the service at or near Vicksburg; deafness increased upon him during December, 1863, so he was hardly able to perform his duty as surgeon; therefore he resigned his commission.

John Moses, private secretary to Governor Yates, says, as soon as the news of the battle of Pittsburg Landing, or Shiloh, reached Springfield, Ill., he was ordered by the governor to appoint surgeons and nurses to repair to the battlefield and attend sick and wounded soldiers from Illinois. He telegraphed to Dr. Clark Roberts, Winchester, Ill., to be one of the surgeons; he accepted and accompanied the party; has known claimant for over thirty years; first heard of claimant's deafness about the close of the war.

As to condition of claimant's health since his discharge, Dr. David Prince says:

"His condition has been uneasiness and tenderness, following throat disease, acquired at time of battle of Shiloh, followed by a perpetual roaring head when not drowned by other noise of an external origin."

On December 6, 1881, Dr. Clark Roberts was examined by Drs. Grinsted, Baxter, and Graham, United States examining board of surgeons, of Washington city, and report as follows:

"We find that he is entirely deaf in left ear. The tympanum is lacerated and the meatus narrowed. The left drum is sound, but thickened and slightly cupped; can not be made to hear in left ear, but when the tone of voice is elevated to four times the volume of ordinary conversation he can hear with the right. He can be said to be severely deaf. If his deafness originated in the service he is entitled to three-fourths."

It is shown that Dr. Brainard, who treated claimant for his disability at Shiloh, is now dead.

The claim was rejected April 17, 1882, by the Pension Office, on the ground that the disability was contracted prior to enlistment in the military service of the United States.

Your committee are clearly of the opinion that the evidence in this case shows that the disability is due to the military service of Dr. Roberts as a volunteer surgeon, and that his subsequent military service tended to increase his disability so incurred, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill with the following amendment: Add "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARTHA H. STRIBLING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2869) for increase of pension of Martha H. Stribling, widow of Cornelius K. Stribling, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the pension of Martha H. Stribling, widow of Cornelius K. Stribling, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy, now on the pension-roll of the United States, to be increased, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, commencing from the 17th day of January, 1880.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "commencing from the 17th day of January, 1880," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "from and after the passage of this act."

The report (by Mr. CULLEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2869) for increase of pension of Martha H. Stribling, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

Martha H. Stribling is the widow of the late Rear-Admiral Cornelius K. Stribling, who died at Martinsburg, W. Va., January 17, 1880. She now receives a pension of $30 a month, that being the allowance under the general law. The claim for increase is based on the long and distinguished service of Rear-Admiral Stribling, embracing a period of sixty-seven years, which service is briefly stated in the following official order of Hon. R. W. Thompson, at the time Secretary of the Navy.

[General order.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 19, 1880.

It is with feelings of deep regret that the Secretary of the Navy announces to the Navy and the Marine Corps the death, at Martinsburg, W. Va., on the 17th instant, of Rear-Admiral Cornelius K. Stribling, the senior officer on the retired-list of the Navy.

The career of this officer was distinguished in many respects. He was born in South Carolina, September 22, 1796, and was, therefore, in the eighty-fourth year of his age at the time of his death. His entry into the Navy as a midshipman was on the 18th day of June, 1812, the date of the declaration of war by the United States against Great Britain, and as long as that war lasted his youthful energies were devoted to the defense of the flag under which he had been appointed to serve. He also participated in the Algerine captures by the squadron of Commodore Stephen Decatur. April 1, 1818, he was promoted to a lieutenant, and in 1823, while in command of a barge, he captured the piratical schooner Pilot, after a running fight, off the coast of Cuba.

He was commissioned a commander January 28, 1840, and a captain August 1, 1853, and was attached to the line-of-battle ship Ohio, on the Pacific station, during a period of the Mexican war. From 1851 to 1853 he was superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and contributed largely to the improvement of that institution. From 1859 to 1861 he commanded our naval force on the Asiatic station, returning from which he found the late rebellion in progress. Although a native of South Carolina he remained loyal and true to the Union.

Under the operation of the act of December 21, 1861, he was, by reason of long service, placed on the retired-list, and was promoted to a commodore on that list August 2, 1862. But he was soon afterward called into active service, and appointed to command the navy-yard at Philadelphia, and in 1864-'65 he commanded the East Gulf blockading squadron. August 6, 1866, he was promoted to a rear-admiral on the retired-list.

He held various important commands ashore, and served in every capacity which falls within the province of an officer of the Navy. His service at sea was over twenty-six years, and that ashore nearly twenty-two years.

Rear-Admiral Stribling was always conspicuous for his correct deportment and Christian qualities, endeavoring by his example and teachings to exalt the moral standing of the officers and enlisted men of the Navy. His record of over sixty-seven years of service was without blemish, and may be pointed to as one worthy of the emulation of the younger officers of the Navy who are just ripening into usefulness. With these highly commendable qualities he possessed fine judgment and excellent ability.

In respect to his memory it is hereby ordered that, on the day after the receipt hereof, the flags of the navy-yards and stations and vessels in commission be displayed at half-mast from sunrise to sunset, and thirteen minute-guns be fired at noon from the navy-yards and stations, flag-ships, and vessels acting singly.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

A favorable report by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress, third session, concludes as follows:

"Your committee is impressed with the fact that from the long, faithful, and distinguished services rendered to his country by the deceased husband of the petitioner, extending, as that service did, through a period of sixty-seven years, she is fairly and equitably entitled to a pension at the hands of the United States Government, and as no provision of the general law meets her case, a special act is necessary. We therefore report favorably upon her claim, and recommend the passage of bill 4866, 'granting a pension to Martha H. Stribling,' as amended by your committee."

In view of the long and distinguished service of Rear-Admiral Stribling, that service covering his entire mature life, and the further fact that he was one of the few distinguished naval officers of Southern birth who contined true to the cause and flag of his country during the civil war, your committee would recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "month," in line 8, and insert "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

Mr. CULLEN. The bill should be further amended by changing the name from Martha H. Stribling to Martha P. Stribling.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLEN. I desire to call attention to an error near the close of the report. It says that a favorable report was made by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress. That is an error; it should be "the Committee on Pensions of the House."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JACOB MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4417) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Jacob Miller, late a private in Company K, Ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, from $30 to $50 a month, from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended so as to make the pension $45 a month instead of $50 a month.

The report (by Mr. CULLEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4417) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Miller, having had the same under consideration, respectfully present the following report:

Jacob Miller enlisted as a private in Company K, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, August 27, 1861, and was discharged from the service September 17, 1864, in consequence of disability caused by a gunshot wound in the forehead, at the battle of Chickamauga, September 19, 1863. He was in hospital at New Albany, Ind., where he was treated, and the fragments of ball finally extracted.

Dr. Mears, pension surgeon, reports, September 17, 1864, —

"That the ball entered the forehead just between the eyebrows, fracturing the external plate of the skull, lodging in left frontal sinus; extracted June 18, 1864. The immediate effect was the loss of sight of left eye, which is still blind. Disability three-fourths."

Owing to the fact that the ball which penetrated the frontal bone was not extracted for the period of nine months, the wound became a running sore, and is now chronic and incurable. The sight of the right eye is also impaired. There are numerous surgical certificates on file showing the desperate character of the injury, and there is no hope of recovery. It is evident that his condition is growing worse from year to year, and the proof shows that he is suffering from loss of memory, which is noticed in the incoherency of his conversation. It is not improbable that his mind is giving way, and that imbecility will result from the injury.

The claimant can perform but little manual labor of any kind, and none whatever that requires stooping. A very disagreeable odor constantly arises from the running sore, and, for the comfort of others, he is obliged to isolate himself from his own family most of the time. Miller's record as a soldier is good. He suffered this terrible wound on the field of battle in the line of duty. He has a wife and two children to support. He is now drawing a pension of $30 a month, it having been increased from time to time from $6 to $30. That is the highest rate which he can receive under the general law for the disability.

Your committee are of the opinion, taking the whole case in view, and especially the desperate and disagreeable character of the injury, impairing both body and mind, that his pension should be increased, and would recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out "fifty," in line 6, and insert "forty-five;" so that it will read "forty-five dollars a month."

The amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

SARAH A. BECKTEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3591) for the relief of Sarah A. Becktel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah A. Becktel, widow of Isaac Becktel, late of Company B, Twenty-sixth Ohio Regiment, and Company E, Third Ohio Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of — dollars per month from the — day of ——, 188–.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the words "Third Ohio Cavalry."

The report (by Mr. CULLEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3591) for the relief of Sarah A. Becktel, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

Isaac Becktel enlisted June 8, 1861, in Company D, Twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, at Olivesburg, Ohio, for three years. In January and February, 1862, he was in hospital at Bardstown, Ky. On March 26, 1862, he was discharged for disability, the surgeon's certificate stating that hernia was one of the causes.

On November 1, 1863, Isaac Becktel again enlisted as a private in Company E, Third Ohio Cavalry, at Mansfield, Ohio, for three years. He was mustered out with his company August 4, 1865.

For a considerable time during both enlistments Becktel was detailed as post blacksmith, and in that capacity rendered valuable services. The claim for a pension in the Pension Office is based on disability in the form of hernia during the period of last enlistment, accrued while shoeing an unruly horse at the military post near Vicksburg, in 1864. The Pension Office, finding that Becktel was discharged from his first enlistment in consequence of disability from hernia, as well as other causes, assumes that said disability existed at the time of second enlistment, and therefore rejects the widow's claim on that ground.

The testimony is very clear that Becktel was a strong, able-bodied man at the time of his first enlistment; that he had never been known to be seriously ill or to require medical treatment. The widow and children also testify that at the time of second enlistment he was strong and capable of doing any work in or about a blacksmith-shop; neighbors and friends testify to the same state of facts. The proof is clear that after his return from the service in 1865 he was suffering from hernia and was obliged to wear a truss constantly.

Obadiah Prentiss, M. D., the family physician of Becktel's family, testifies that in 1854 and 1855 Becktel was a strong, healthy man and free from hernia; that he was called to his bedside in 1872, just before his death; that he found hernia or rupture, which appeared hard and irreducible, and which caused his death. The testimony is strong and clear that hernia was the cause of death, and the Pension Office concedes that to be the fact.

Your committee are satisfied that the cause of death accrued in the military service and in the line of duty, and while conceding that the Pension Office was justified in rejecting the claim under a strict construction of the law, are of the opinion that the widow has equitable claims, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, striking out, however, all after the word "cavalry," in the seventh line of the bill.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

Mr. NEECE. Ought not the amount of pension to be named in the bill?

Mr. MATSON. Not necessarily. I think, however, that the bill should be further amended by adding the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE A. MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3527) granting a pension to George A. Marshall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George A. Marshall, who in the war with Mexico was a member of Company C, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. STEELE) was as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, having had under consideration House bill 3527, have carefully considered the same, and find that George A. Marshall, for whom the bill proposes relief, was a soldier of the Mexican war; that he was sound when he entered the service; that he was afflicted with piles and asthma on his return, and that he is now and has been so afflicted nearly all of the time since his return.

Your committee therefore recommend the bill do pass.

In support of these views are appended papers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, which are made a part of this report.

MISSOURI CITY, CLAY COUNTY, MISSOURI, April 28, 1883.

I first became acquainted with George A. Marshall in the year 1859; was with him during the late civil war in this State. I never knew him to take any part against the Government of the United States; look on him as a loyal citizen. I was on duty in Ray and Clay for several months; was at the residence of George A. Marshall. He always told me he was in the Mexican war from Kentucky. I enlisted 5th of August, 1861; was commissioned in July, 1862; was honorably discharged, which our old muster-rolls will show. I have no interest in this claim, no way, shape, nor manner.

EXAMINING SURGEON'S CERTIFICATE.
(Old war.)

[Name of claimant, George Marshall, private, Company C, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, Mexican war. Examining surgeon's address, Kansas City, Jackson County, Missouri. Date of examination, May 2, 1883.]

We hereby certify that we have carefully examined this applicant, who claims that while in the service of the United States, at or near a place named (old) Mexico, and while in the line of duty, on or about the —— day of fall 1847, he incurred piles and asthma, and that in consequence thereof he is totally disabled for earning his subsistence by manual labor.

He states that he is 54 years of age, that he weighs one hundred and forty pounds, and that he is 5 feet 8 inches in height.

His pulse-rate per minute is eighty-four, his respiration eighteen, and his temperature ninety-eight and one-half.

The examination reveals the following facts: Piles, external (annular), two inches across; congestion of the rectum (rate half); increased resonance of the entire lungs; vesicular murmur increased; expiration prolonged (rate half).

From the condition and history of the claimant, it is our opinion the disability was incurred in the service as claimed, and that it is not aggravated or protracted by vicious habits.

We find the disability as above described to entitle him to total rating.

S. D. BOWKER,
JOHN THORNE,
Examining Surgeons.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

FRANCES M'NEIL POTTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4822) for the relief of Frances McNeil Potter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act Frances McNeil Potter, whose name is now borne on the pension-roll at $20 per month, shall be paid in lieu thereof the sum of $40 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommend that the bill be amended so as to make the pension granted thereby $30 per month instead of $40 per month.

The report (by Mr. YORK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 4822, have considered the same, and report as follows:

Frances McNeil Potter is a daughter of General John McNeil, United States Army; that John McNeil, of New Hampshire, was appointed a captain of infantry March 12, 1812, and had charge of the troops at Concord, and subsequently at Plattsburg, where he was charged also with the supervision of the drilling of the new soldiers. In August, 1813, he was promoted to the rank of major, and marched to Burlington, in command of a regiment.

In July, 1814, he served in Brown's division, in Sacket's Harbor, until he was ordered with his regiment, in July, to the frontier at Niagara. During an attack by the enemy Colonel Campbell, of the Eleventh Regiment, fell, and the command of the regiment devolved upon Major McNeil.

The action of this officer at this battle, known in history as the battle of Chippewa, was supposed by his superior officers to have had a determining influence in securing the success of the American Army.

General Scott, in his report, said: "The self-possession of Major McNeil under fire was unequaled," and "the flank movement of the gallant McNeil in this important battle turned the fortunes of the day and gave victory to the American troops."

General Jesup declares:

"I followed the Eleventh Regiment with my command over the bridge. I had ample opportunity of witnessing the conduct of Major McNeil. He formed his regiment under fire of the enemy with the accuracy of a parade. He promptly availed himself of every advantage presented, and he wielded his force with great coolness and judgment, and on his own responsibility and without orders made the decisive movement at Chippewa."

General Scott, in his report to General Brown, said:

"Major McNeil deserves everything which conspicuous skill and gallantry can win from a grateful country."

He subsequently commanded the Eleventh Regiment at the battle of Lundy's Lane, and in this engagement he not only exhibited the military tact, judgment, and bravery that had been exhibited in the battle of Chippewa, but was severely wounded and rendered a cripple for life. He subsequently served in 1824 on the Indian frontier.

His death, which occurred in Washington, February, 1850, was commemorated appropriately by the action of both Houses of Congress, which were then in session, eulogies being delivered upon him by Mr. Herbert, of the House, and Mr. Hale in the Senate.

This officer was for merit and gallantry in the service promoted from a captaincy to the rank of brevet brigadier-general, and not only devoted his time to the service of the country through a long series of years, but finally succumbed to the effect of wounds received and diseases contracted in the service. And your committee are of the opinion that the gallant service of the father to his country entitles his daughter to consideration from his grateful countrymen.

And your committee recommend that House bill 4822 do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out the word "forty," in the fifth line, and insert the word "thirty."

The question was upon the amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WOLFORD. I am satisfied now, as I always have been, that the great services of this officer should be deemed sufficient to give his daughter a pension of $40 a month instead of $30 a month. I do not want to make any argument upon it, but simply to say that if there is any case of merit in the world this is one.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote upon agreeing to the amendment, and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WOLFORD. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 8.

So (no further count being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

BEN MORGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1256) increasing the pension of Ben Morgan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Ben Morgan, late colonel of the Seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of his pension of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1256) increasing the pension of Ben Morgan, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The records of the War Department show that claimant was mustered in as lieutenant-colonel of the Seventy-fifth Ohio Volunteers June 18, 1863, and was mustered out March 15, 1865. On the 1st of July, 1863, while engaged in battle, at Gettysburg, he was severely wounded by a musket-ball through the left lung. The ball entered near the apex of the left scapula and passed out midway between the axilla and left nipple. For this wound Colonel Morgan was pensioned at $30 per month, for total disability, by certificate issued March 20, 1869. In addition to the serious disability from the wound, Colonel Morgan is suffering from almost total deafness of both ears, caused by exposure in confederate prisons from August 17, 1864, to March, 1865, having been captured at Gainesville, Fla., on the former date. The first examination by a surgeon, in 1869, showed that the hearing of the left ear had then been destroyed. Medical examination in 1873 shows that the other ear became affected, and that at times he loses the use of his voice.

The board of examining surgeons at Dayton, Ohio, under date of February 13, 1884, certify that Colonel Morgan is very deaf in both ears, can not hear ordinary sounds, or even very loud conversation, except when spoken loudly to in the ear. He carries with him and constantly uses an ear-trumpet, which somewhat aids him in hearing. Neuralgia and rheumatism, undoubtedly caused by the wound of shoulder and chest, add greatly to his disabilities, and not only is he entirely incapacitated for business, but, according to the evidence filed in support of his claim for increase, requires much aid of another person, particularly outside of his house.

The claim for increase has been rejected by the Pension Office because it is not shown that the combined disabilities have resulted in such total helplessness as to entitle him under the general law to the next higher rate to that now paid him for the wound alone.

The degree of deafness shown in this case, were it the only disability to consider, would entitle Colonel Morgan to a rate of total in rank, or $30 per month, but as the law does not permit of compounding disabilities of high grades, except the same have reached such a degree of helplessness as to require the constant aid and attendance of another person, the relief asked for can only be obtained by special legislation.

The claimant, now well advanced in years, was a gallant officer, and in line of duty received injuries which, as shown, have robbed him of the ability to procure subsistence through efforts on his part.

The committee are therefore of opinion that his pension should be increased, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, amended, however, by striking out the words "seventy-two," in line 6, and inserting instead the words "forty-five."

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out $72 and insert $45.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ALBERT BRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3382) granting a pension to Albert Brant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at $20 per month, the name of Albert Brant, late a private in Company A, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3382) granting a pension to Albert Brant, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Albert Brant enlisted in Company A, Fourth Ohio Cavalry, September 10, 1861, and was mustered out November 25, 1864. He not only served faithfully, but performed extraordinary service, as appears from the certificates of Hugh Ewing, late major-general United States Volunteers, and George Crook, now brigadier-general United States Army, as scout and dispatch-carrier. In company with one Wickfield, he was directed by General Crook to take a very important dispatch from Paint Rock, on the Tennessee River, to General Sherman, then supposed to be making his way up said river. The task was successfully accomplished, after a trip of one hundred and seventy miles, in skiff, on foot, and mule-back, through the enemy's country, after many hardships and many narrow escapes from capture. From this trip and the subsequent campaign following the battle of Mission Ridge he became completely broken down, but after a few weeks of medical treatment recovered sufficiently to go on duty, and continued with his command until April 3, 1864, when he was admitted to hospital for treatment for abscess of left axilla, where he remained until the 23d of said month. The record also shows that he was under treatment for diarrhea from August 29 to October 19, 1864.

Brant applied for pension on account of abscess of right side under arm, caused from wearing heavy belts, and ulcerated bowels, the result of diarrhea contracted in service. The claim is legally established, but was rejected because in the opinion of the medical officers of the Pension Office there is now no disability from diarrhea, and there has been no pensionable disability from abscess near right axilla. This opinion is based upon the certificate of the Cincinnati examining board of surgeons, dated April 25, 1883. An examination had May 24, 1882, showed three-fourths disability from chronic diarrhea.

Dr. Condon, claimant's family physician, testifies that he has treated Brant frequently for diarrhea since his discharge, but can not recollect the number of times he prescribed for him. The case is one in which the disease frequently recurs. A number of claimant's neighbors also testify that Brant is not an able-bodied man because of trouble in his bowels, enabling him to perform light labor only for a short time. Has not been able since his discharge from service to do the work of a full hand.

From the medical as well as the lay evidence, heretofore referred to, the committee are clearly of opinion that, notwithstanding the judgment of the Pension Office to the contrary, Brant is disabled from disease contracted during his long and faithful service in a degree sufficient to entitle him to relief, and therefore report favorably on the bill, with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "twenty," in line 4, and insert instead the word "eight."

The amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out "$20" and insert "$8."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES RODEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2543) granting a pension to James Roden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Roden, late of Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having in charge bill H. R. 2543, respectfully report:

James Roden was enrolled a private in Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, on the 3d day of September, 1862, and was mustered out with his company August 17, 1863. On the 10th day of October, 1863, he again enlisted in the Eight Regiment of Connecticut Infantry, and was discharged at Fort Trumbull, Conn., February 20, 1864, by reason of varicose veins and ulcers, which unfitted him entirely for the duties of a soldier.

He is now 64 years of age, is almost totally deaf, and nearly blind. The disability for which he was discharged from the Army has increased with advancing years. His last medical examination, conducted July 19, 1882, by Doctors J. S. Beck, J. M. Weaver, and A. S. Dunlap, at Dayton, Ohio, reads as follows:

"James Roden, who is an applicant for an invalid pension, is almost totally blind and deaf. In our opinion the said Roden is totally incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence. Judging from his present condition and from the evidence before us, it is our belief that the said disability did originate in the service and in the line of duty. The claimant is 62 years of age. There is a partial cataract in both eyes, making vision quite deficient; he can not read ordinary print. He is almost totally deaf, so that you can not make him hear without screaming in his ears. We rate his disease of eyes at one-half, and deafness at one-half."

The Pension Department rejected this claim on July 18, 1883, because he was unable to obtain evidence from comrades as to his condition while in the Army, and the only testimony which he has of his condition at that time is that of the assistant surgeon of his regiment, Isaac G. Porter, who, under date of the 20th of February, 1864, at Fort Trumbull, Conn., says:

"I certify that I have carefully examined the said James Roden and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of varicose veins and varicose ulcer, with general debility."

Your committee, in views of all the facts, think this a meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

HUGH RYAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2537) granting a pension to Hugh Ryan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Hugh Ryan, late assistant surgeon of the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2537) granting a pension to Dr. Hugh Ryan, respectfully report:

Dr. Hugh Ryan was assistant surgeon of the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. The claim for a pension is chronic rheumatism, contracted while a soldier in the service of the United States. Dr. Ryan was commissioned in the service of the United States on or about the 5th day of March, in the year 1863, and his resignation was accepted March 17, 1864, on account of physical disability.

The Pension Department rejected this claim for pension December 29, 1871, on the ground that he was not disabled from disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty; it being held that the disability was chargeable to intemperate habits, which are alleged against him by an examining surgeon of the Pension Office.

The proof in this case is clear that Dr. Hugh Ryan was a sound and healthy man at the time of entering the service, as evidenced by the following affidavits.

Under date of October 1, 1871, G. W. Ronald, M. D., ex-surgeon of the Thirty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, testifies:

"I am well acquainted with the claimant, Dr. Hugh Ryan; he was my hospital steward in 1862, and during that time I found him to be diligent, honest, and sober, and in every way attentive to his duties.

"He was promoted to assistant surgeon, Thirty-fourth Kentucky Infantry, while under my charge. He was a sound, healthy man, to the best of my knowledge and belief, previous to entering the United States Army."

Also, the following, under date of October 14, 1871, at Old Deposit, Jefferson County, Kentucky.

"We, the undersigned, being personally acquainted with Dr. Hugh Ryan, late assistant surgeon Thirty-fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, do hereby certify that, to the best of our knowledge, he was a sound, healthy man previous to entering the service, and that his disease was contracted in the service of the United States Army from exposure incident to said service."

Signed by R. T. Smith, sr.; George Gorlick; J. G. Knighton; Eli P. Farmer, late captain Company K, Thirty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry; Milton Callaghan, major Thirty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry; John Armstrong, first lieutenant Thirty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry; Sebley Harney, late colonel Thirty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry; Joseph Turner; R. T. Smith, jr.

Other affidavits are on file to the same effect as the above.

It is equally well established that Dr. Ryan contracted chronic rheumatism while in the service which incapacitated him from performing his duties as a physician.

Dr. G. W. Ronald, late surgeon of the Thirty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, testifies in addition to the above-quoted affidavits:

"I have examined said claimant and find him suffering from chronic rheumatic corditis and incapable of performing his duties as a physician."

Captain Pickering, of Company I, Thirty-fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, under date of the 6th of July, 1869, testifies as follows:

"I have been acquainted with the claimant, Dr. Hugh Ryan, for about seven years. The first knowledge I had of the sickness of the said Dr. Hugh Ryan was while his command was at Cumberland Gap, in the State of Tennessee, on or about the 1st day of March, 1864. This disease was contracted while in the service, and I believe from the exposure of camp life."

G. W. Miles, clerk of the county court in Jefferson County, Kentucky, under date of October 24, 1870, states:

"I knew Dr. Hugh Ryan to be a sound, healthy man previous to his entering the United States service, and I firmly believe that the claimant contracted his disease in the service of the United States. I am a practicing physician of twenty-five years' standing, and have no interest in the claim of Dr. Ryan."

The testimony shows clearly that Dr. Ryan was attacked with rheumatism at Cumberland Gap in the latter part of the year 1863, where he was confined to his quarters for two months prior to the acceptance of his resignation. Since then he has been a constant sufferer from this complaint.

The evidence upon which the rejection of the claim was based is, in the opinion of this committee, not of such a character as to controvert the positive proof that the claimant did contract disability because of his military service, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MICHAEL MACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2536) granting a pension to Michael Mack.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Mack, late a private in Company A, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; also late a private in Company G, first battalion Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2536) granting a pension to Michael Mack, respectfully reports:

Michael Mack was a private in Company G, first battalion of Eighteenth United States Infantry and Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

It appears that the claimant enlisted as a private in Company A, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on July 17, 1861, and was discharged therefrom December 22, 1861, and enlisted January 10, 1862, in Company G, first battalion Eighteenth United States Infantry, and was finally discharged from the service June 13, 1862. He filed a claim for pension September 17, 1866, alleging disability from varicose veins of left leg, contracted in the service. His claim was finally rejected in May, 1882, on the ground that the disability existed before he enlisted.

The claimant is now nearly 70 years of age. He is totally disabled from performing manual labor of any kind. In an affidavit made by the claimant the says:

"My disability is varicose veins of the left leg between the knee and ankle. The disability was caused by hard marches in the year 1863."

Nelson L. Lutz, late captain in the Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, makes affidavit:

"I am well acquainted with Michael Mack. I became acquainted with him at Circleville, Pickaway County, Ohio, previous to his enlistment in Company A, Twenty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and he was at that time a sound, healthy man, and, so far as human observation goes, I believed him to be free from any disability whatever. When I enlisted him he was working in the harvest field and able to perform any kind of hard labor."

Duncan McKenzie testifies:

"I am intimately acquainted with Michael Mack; knew him four years previous to his enlistment in the late war. He always appeared to be a man of sound health. His work much of the time was ditching, which requires a man with no physical defects. From my acquaintance with him I regarded him in every way sound previous to enlistment."

Dr. Thomas W. Jones, a citizen of Columbus, Ohio, says:

"I knew Michael Mack prior to enlistment, and had him in my employ as a ditcher upon my farm for several weeks, and knew him to be at that time an extraordinarily robust and able-bodied man, doing as much work as any man I ever employed. I have every reason to believe him to have been a sound man at that time, and I think if he had not been so I would have known it."

Dr. T. W. Jones, of South Bloomfield, Ohio, under date of November 8, 1872, says that he had known the claimant prior to his enlistment in 1861, and to his positive knowledge Mack was a sound and healthy man, performing labor for affiant at various times which required the best of physical and muscular force. Considered him then as of exceptional good health and constitution.

Others likewise testify to claimant's soundness and good health before he enlisted.

It is not denied, but admitted, by the Pension Office that the alleged disease existed while the claimant was in the service, but the office accepts the records showing the existence thereof prior to enlistment, and therefore rejects the claim.

The fact being established beyond a doubt that the Government accepted of claimant's services twice, and that since his final discharge he has been almost totally disabled, and the further fact that the disability existed while in the service being admitted, your committee is clearly of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore recommends the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

SALLIE INGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4238) granting a pension to Sallie Ingham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sallie Ingham, formerly Sallie Frary, mother of Justin Frary, late a private in Company I, One hundred and first Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4238) granting a pension to Sallie Ingham, would respectfully report:

That the claimant, Sallie Ingham, is a resident of Tiffin, Seneca County, Ohio. She was twice married. Her first husband, Mr. —— Frary, died many years ago, leaving the claimant, his widow, and two sons and two daughters. The sons are dead. The daughters survive and have families.

One son, Justin Frary, in 1862 enlisted as a private soldier in Company I, One hundred and first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

At the time of his enlistment, and prior and subsequent thereto, he maintained his mother, and was her only dependence. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Chickamauga, and died in a confederate hospital at Danville, Va., in December, 1863. The claimant drew a pension of $96 per year until July, 1869, when she intermarried with Mr. —— Ingham.

Mr. Ingham died in April, 1870. He left the claimant, Mr. Ingham, a small amount of property. This maintained her until about a year ago, when it was all exhausted.

Mrs. Ingham is without any means. Her age is about 75 years. She is a pioneer mother in Northwestern Ohio, is a lady of high character, and held in great esteem.

Having forfeited her pension by reason of her second marriage she now asks its restoration, and the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE W. KISER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2539) granting a pension to George W. Kiser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Kiser, late a private in Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having in charge the bill H. R. 2539, and having examined all the testimony in the case, submit the following report:

The claimant, George W. Kiser, enlisted June 10, 1861, and was discharged for disability December 21, 1862. The claim is that, during a campaign in West Virginia in October, 1861, he contracted rheumatism, and at Bowling Green, Ky., in April, 1862, he dislocated his left ankle, and contracted piles.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Department June 22, 1883, on the ground that claimant has not been disabled since discharge, in a pensionable degree, by reason of alleged rheumatism, piles, and dislocated left ankle. The report of the Adjutant-General, under date of November 20, 1881, says that, in July and August, 1862, claimant was detailed from the service to drive ambulance on account of being lame.

The company return for December, 1861, shows him furloughed from December 18, 1861, to January 7, 1862, on account of sickness.

John H. James, captain commanding his company, of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the date of December 21, 1862, says:

"Kiser suffers from an old injury to his foot; the foot is greatly swollen and inflamed, causing lameness, which constantly throws him back on a march and renders him unfit for military service in the field."

Andrew Sabine, assistant surgeon Twenth-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at same date, says:

"I certify that I have carefully examined the said George W. Kiser, of Capt. John H. James's company, and find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of lameness."

On the same date he received his discharge, signed by William H. Squire, commanding the regiment.

Benjamin Franklin, of the National Military Home, Montgomery County, Ohio, testifies that—

"Kiser was a neighbor, and that he was acquainted with him ten years before the war, and he was sound, healthy, and robust at the time of enlistment."

Henry Shutto, of Hamilton, Ohio, testifies to having been "acquainted with claimant before the war, and knows him to have been an able-bodied man at the date of his enlistment."

Alexander M. Hall, of Hamilton, Ohio, says "he was an able-bodied man at the date of enlistment."

Benjamin Franklin, a comrade, testifies at a later date that—

"Claimant contracted rheumatism in February, 1862, and while in the service and in line of duty, and that he also injured his ankle very badly while on a march. He also testifies that he saw claimant in the year 1866, and found him suffering from rheumatism and swelled ankle, and appeared greatly broken down."

Joseph H. Coster, of Dayton, Ohio, says he—

"Saw claimant in the early part of the year 1864, and he was greatly broken down and suffering from rheumatism and was very lame."

Alexander M. Hall testifies that—

"Since Kiser came home from the service he has been unable to do any kind of manual labor by reason of rheumatism and piles."

R. L. Lanham, M. D., under date of June 11, 1883, states—

"I treated him in the spring of 1863, soon after his discharge from service, for lumbago or rheumatism of the back. He made a slow recovery from the first attack.

"Since then up to the time of his going to the Soldier's Home he has had periodical attacks of the same disease."

"By referring to my book I find in 1866 I treated him for [illegible] rheumatism. He has also in addition to above been afflicted with pil[illegible]

In view of the fact that George W. Kiser was in the s[illegible] over one year and a half and then discharged for a disability, which has exi[illegible] ever since, unfitting him for the performance of manual labor, and also the t[illegible]ony, which seems to be respectable in character and abundant, that he wa[illegible] a sound and healthy man at the time of entering the service, your committee re[illegible] the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to [illegible]

WILLIAM BOLWORK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3749) granting a pension to William Bolwork.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Bolwork, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LE FEVRE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having in charge bill H. R. [illegible] respectfully report:

William Bolwork enlisted in June, 1861, as a private in Comp[illegible] Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged Jul[illegible] He claims a pension for loss of left eye and left hand, also injury to rig[illegible] and right shoulder and severely injured testicles. It appears in the tes[illegible]mony that claimant was captured at the battle of Stone River, Tennessee, was [illegible] to Libby Prison, and remained there about two months, was then paroled and sent to Parole Camp, Annapolis, Md., where he remained about a month and was then sent to Camp Chase, Ohio.

His claim was rejected April 14, 1882, on the ground that he was not [illegible] duty when injury occurred to his eye and arm, and that his other di[illegible]
